Planning To Go To Law School?
Consider: Hofstra University School of Law
Pre-Law Summer Institute

The Hofstra University School of Law will again offer a "Pre-Law Summer Institute" for five weeks from June 3 to July 3 for the weekday section (Tuesdays & Thursdays), from June 2 to July 2 for the evening section (Mondays and Wednesdays) and from May 31 to June 28 for the Saturday sections.
The Institute will be of value to those already planning to attend law school or those still undecided. Taught by the Hofstra Law School faculty, the Institute seeks to develop analytical skills and to introduce the student to the law library and legal writing techniques. These are essential tools for competent performance in law school. The institute will be conducted in the same manner as regular law school courses and will include case and statutory analyses and research techniques.

MINIMUM REQUIREMENTS FOR ADMISSION

Applicants must have successfully completed at least two years of college. For further information and application, call 516-560-3636 or write:

SUNDERLAND—It was just a rumor, folks. Pioneer Valley Regional Transit Authority service between UMass and here will remain intact, says Paul Korpita, board of selectmen chairman.

How the rumor got started is anyone's guess. But the town will continue to allocate its $300 share for PVTA service, says Korpita—who works as a chemist at UMass' West Experimental Station.

If PVTA service were out, Korpita says, he would have to start driving to work. And he doesn't want to do that again.

Anti-violence rally planned

A rally and march on Whitmore will be held at noon April 15, starting on the south side of the Student Union Building. The Purpose of the demonstration is to protest violence against women and Third World people on campus.

The rally is sponsored by the Women's Issues Team of the Student Center for Educational Research and Advocacy. SCERA members will present Chancellor Henry Koffler with a list of demands regarding lighting and education at UMass.

quist said after the game. Indeed, the junior breezed through most of the game. He gave up only two hits: a double over the head of right fielder Doug Aylward by UConn's Mike Panciera in the third inning and another double to Doug Eliot in the fifth. He struck out five batters.

The hard luck case in game one was UConn pitcher Ken Brown (0-2) who gave up only two hits himself. The Minutemen got their run in the third inning when Mark Litano's sacrifice fly drove home Dean Bennett. Bennett was given third base, on Brown's biggest mistake of the day, a balk.

Minutemen rally to sweep

By MIKE ESTRADA
Collegian Staff

UMass coach Dick Bergquist's post–game demure never gives you even the slightest clue as to how the game turned out.

One would never know, for instance, that yesterday the Minutemen had swept a double-header (1-0; 4-3) from the University of Connecticut, ranked first yesterday in New England in the coaches poll.

There are a few people who are going to have to explain why UMass wasn't mentioned in the top seven.

"We can be one of the best teams in New England," Bergquist said. "This (two wins) will help us."

In fact, very little has gone wrong with the Minutemen (6-6) since they have come north, spare the fact that rain cancellations have plagued the schedule. They beat Maine after the Bears were touted as one of the teams to beat in New England. And now they have turned the tables again by beating the Huskies (6-12), last year's NCAA Northeast Regional Champion at Earl Lorden Field.

Yes, they can be the top team in New England. GAME 2. Just when it seemed that the Minutemen were going to be shut down completely by UConn's Craig Steuernagel, the Minutemen offense shook off its lethargy. After being down 3-0 after three innings, UMass scored one run in the fifth and three more in the sixth to send the Huskies home with their tails between their legs.

Starter Steuernagel was cruising through five innings. The lefthander had allowed only one hit, a single to lead off batter Doug Aylward. After a walk to Mark Litano, he disposed of 14 Minutemen in a row.

UMass Chuck Thompson, (3-0) was pitching well but those little things were getting him. The three men who scored reached base on a walk – an error and a hit batsman respectively. He had only allowed 2 hits.

With two out in the bottom of the fifth, UMass third baseman Barry Bennett hit a long shot into right center field for a triple. His brother Dean then hit a gapper to left for a double to score Barry.

"I think if anything keyed it in those innings (fifth and sixth) it was those guys," Bergquist said.

Mark Litano started the bottom of the sixth with a triple to left center. Exit Steuernagel and enter Mark Winters, the lefty ace, to face the left-handed hitting Mike McEvilly. McEvilly, after seeing lefties all day, fought off a pitch and ripped the ball into left center field to score Litano.

After Winters caught Jim Aulenback looking at strike three and got Mark Brown to pop-up, the UMass barrage continued. Catcher Dave Oleksak sliced a double into right to score McEvilly and tie the game at 3. With Oleksak at second, shortstop Vin Bonanno reconciled two earlier errors by hitting a line-drive over the glove of Huskie shortstop Carol Guzzardi to send Oleksak across the plate with the game winner.

"Mark Brown is probably the best 1-3 in the East," Berg-

Chimps eye home opener

By SHARON PANNOZZO
Collegian Staff

Tomorrow afternoon the men's JV Lacrosse Team will host Westfield State College in its opening game of the 1980 season. Coach Len Caffrey's Chimps have defeated Westfield handily in two pre-season scrimmages, and expect to be victorious in the first regular game.

The Chimps hope to improve last year's impressive 7-1 record, and avenge a 16-14 loss to Naval Academy Prep. According to Caffrey, this will be "their toughest game", although Dean Junior College should also provide formidable competition. Caffrey doesn't anticipate any difficulty handling the other scheduled opponents, which include: Brown, Williams, Harvard and Dartmouth.

Eric Conz, Pete McElroy and Mike Mahoney will be the starting midfielders. Conz is a freshman from Northampton, who Caffrey described as having "lots of potential". Mahoney, a good all-around player, complements Conz and a speedy McElroy.

Caffrey has two returning attackers from last year's squad; Ron Spelman and Scott Philpott. These two will be the mainstay of the Chimp attack. Other attackers who will see action are Paul Harris, Derrick Petch, Greg Figgie and Paul Matheson.

The defensive squad is composed mainly of freshmen. Tom D'Normandie, Tim Woods, Joe Grab, and Walter Josiah will follow the experienced stick of the only returning defenseman, Jim Scanlon. Tom Seiler and Dave Wall will split the goal-tending duties.

Caffrey, a 1978 UMass graduate, was a midfielder for the Gorillas. This is Caffrey's second year as coach of the Chimps, and is assisted by Steve Spelman and Jeff Spooner. Spooner was a four-time All-American lacrosse player and the top scorer in UMass history. Burke Biro and Gary Sherman, the only seniors on the team, also give Caffrey a helping hand. These two provide leadership and work extensively with their younger teammates.

Junior Kennedy and his Cincinnati Reds teammates will continue a baseball tradition today when they open the major league season with a game against the Atlanta Braves. (AP Laserphoto)

Ladies in waiting

Its time has come?

Women's professioanl basketball? In the "New York Times"? On the front page of sports, no less?

Dream no longer, closet believers, for it actually happened last Sunday. Women's pro ball joined tennis, bowling, and golf on the list of sports that are being recognized by this male-oriented sports world as far as what women can do. After years of trial and near-failure, this aspect of women's professional sport has come to life.

Or has it?

The game story printed by the Times boasted of an attendance of 525, with the City Council President in the crowd. The games was no cage time-dragger, but a playoff contest for the crown in the Women's Basketball League. Wow, you may wonder, 525 people would sure look isolated in Madison Square Garden. The Garden? Nice try. This championship game was held in the confines of Queens College, New York, the "home" of the WBL's New York Stars. They were playing the Iowa Cornets. Big deal? Seemed so to the Times. So what? The Times probably had nothing better to put in except baseball previews and NBA playoff action.

Well, I've no answer, except that the game was in New York, it was a playoff game for some sort of title, and it was within the realm of professional sport.

Women's professional sport. Say it in your mind five times fast. What does it produce? Billie Jean King, Tracey Austin, Martina Natrivalova, Nacy Lopez, Pat Bradley, Kathy Withworth.

What? Molly "Machine Gunn" Bolin is not on your list? How about Karen Logan? No Ann Meyers? You remeber her, don't you? NBA prospect, with the Pacers? Aw, come on, don't play coy. She went to New Jersey in the WBL.

You honestly don't know, do you?

Such is the name women's pro ball has made in the last few year. It wobbles along slowly, picking up nothing more than a few hard-fought miles and a second-hand basketball court.

The press it gets ranges from the microscopic print pasted in the stats section of the sports pages to something occasional like the Times article to a lampooning by Millar and Hinds in the cartoon strip "Tank McNamara".

The WBL works in not so much an infancy state than in a novelty stage. Pro ball is nothing more than a curious activity seen by the few fanatics. At least, that seems to be the general consensus.

Tell that to the college players at Queens, Old Dominion, Fordham University and UMass. Tell that to those people who have played basketball since they were able to hold and shoot it through the hoop. Tell that to someone like Sue Peters, who holds the UMass record for most points scored by any player, man or woman.

Women's pro ball may just turn out to possess the same superstar potentials as in tennis, bowling, and golf. It may also spark something in our already sport-saturated hearts that this pro sport merits attention and time.

Who knows? In a few years, Peters may just play to a sold-out crowd at Madison Square Garden, helping her team, whatever it may be, win the WBL title.

Iran flexes

Attacks Iraq by air

Associated Press

An Iranian Phantom fighter and three Iranian military helicopters dueled yesterday with Iraqi helicopters near the border between the two countries, Iranian television reported.

No planes were shot down in the battle over the Iranian border town of Baveissi, the broadcast said. But it said there also were artillery barrages and rocket attacks, and 15 Iranian Revolutionary Guards were wounded.

Despite an ever-escalating war of words, prior to yesterday's reported air battle, fighting between the two countries had been limited to minor ground skirmishes near their 800-mile border.

In one such skirmish yesterday, according to Tehran Radio, Iraqi forces attacked the Qasr-e-Shirin area of Iran's southwestern Kermanshah Province with light and heavy weapons, but an Iraqi border post was destroyed.

In two previous days of fighting reported by Tehran Radio, Iraqi artillery pounded an Iranian border position at Bay Beyti, and Iranian troops returned fire, smashing Iraqi positions across the frontier.

None of the reports of fighting could be confirmed independently.

Earlier yesterday, Iranian Foreign Minister Sadegh Ghotbzadeh was quoted as saying, "we have decided to overthrow the Baathist regime of Iraq." The statement, carried by Tehran Radio, also quoted the foreign minister as saying Iran would defend itself against Iraqi military attacks and sabotage.

"Any country supporting America in practice must face action similar to that (which) Iran has taken against America," the foreign minister was quoted as saying. Iraq's pro-Soviet government is widely regarded as strongly anti-American.

Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini, Iran's revolutionary leader, also vowed Wednesday to overthrow Iraq's government and to relegate its leaders "to the dustbin of history." His comments were monitored in London.

In Baghdad, the official Iraqi news agency said Iraqi security forces had uncovered a plan for subversion backed by Iran but also involving local elements.

Threatens U S hostages

Associated Press

The young radicals holding 50 Americans in Tehran threatened yesterday to burn the U.S. Embassy and kill their hostages if the United States tries "even the smallest" military move against Iran.

The Carter administration is hinting at a possible naval blockade of Iran if the hostages are not freed. But in Washington and other world capitals yesterday, American diplomats sought the help of U.S. allies in a broader program to punish Iran economically, a program they say could make tougher moves unnecessary.

Secretary of State Cyrus R. Vance summoned ambassadors from 20 nations to the State Department to present the U.S. case, and foreign ministers of West European nations were gathering in Portugal for consultations on the crisis.

West European and other nations were considering taking action with the United States, but any decision might be weeks away.

The embassy militants issued a statement yesterday, read on Tehran Radio, declaring, "In the name of God the avenger we plainly warn the criminal government of the United States that if it undertakes even the smallest military intervention in Iran we will kill all the spy hostages together and we emphatically warn the respected U.S. nation that the criminals of the U.S. administration will be directly responsible for such an event."

The militants later told a Western reporter in Tehran that by "spy hostages" they meant all of their captives.

Lottery draws guests

By ED LEVINE
Collegian Staff

Visitors will be allowed into the dormitories during Spring Concert weekend, although 3500 guests - to be chosen by lottery - will be allowed into the buildings.

The decision to allow a limited number of guests was arrived at yesterday during a meeting at the UMass police headquaters in Dickinson Hall between members of the Office of Residential Life, the Student Government Association, the Union Program Council and the UMass Department of Public Safety.

The "limited guest policy" also calls for the establishment of extra security systems for the dorms, requiring work-study and non-work study students to work a total of 13,000 hours on security, according to a memorandum issued yesterday morning by Marjorie Lenn, director of ORL.

Edelstein said yesterday the process for determining who will be allowed to have guests "will probably be done by lottery system." Edelstein said the recommendations made at the meeting will be passed on the Vice-Chancellor for Student Affairs Dennis L. Madson, who will devise a system of issuing passes along with ORL.

"It has been left in the hands of ORL to equitably disperse 3500 guests around campus, and UPC can go on with the production," Edelstein said.

Lenn also asked for a "guaranteed underwriting of the concert by the SGA," and SGA co-President Rich LaVoice said he would ask the Undergraduate Student Senate to make the commitment (see story page 3). The guarantee would be for the total production cost of the concert, $250,000, although LaVoice said enough revenue is expected to be taken in from the show to offset the costs.

Other stipulations asked for by Lenn include the securing of the stadium, a "closed campus" for the weekend (meaning no open events which may attract people), and a guarantee that residence hall security needs will be met.

"If things go wrong this year, it (Spring Concert) won't happen next year," said UPC Promotion Director Darlene Lorkiewicz. "We're not saying students shouldn't have fun, but they should respect each others' rights and help insure Spring Concert does happen next year."

Lorkiewicz also said UPC is taking a "firm stand" that the concert be a "one day affair. This is not an entire weekend of activity, just on Saturday from 9:30 to 5:30," she said.

The plan for distribution of tickets has also been changed. Student tickets will be distributed on April 22 in Hampden Center in the Southwest Residential Area. Guest tickets will go on sale April 14 at 9 a.m. in the Fine Arts Center Box Office. Guest tickets will cost $15 a piece and students will be allowed to purchase only two tickets, a limitation which will be "strictly enforced," Lorkiewicz said.

UM Boston still occupied

By BRIAN O'CONNELL
Collegian Staff

As a group of 50 UMass/Boston students spend their second day occupying the offices of UMB Chancellor Richard Corrigan, no action has been taken by university administrators to evict the students, UMB spokesperson Carol Cohen said yesterday.

The group, which calls itself the Progressive Student Alliance, occupied the offices Monday morning while Corrigan was out of the building. The group is calling for a 51 percent student control of campus government, the reinstatement of recently released Assistant Vice-Chancellor Heinz Bondy, tenure granted to professors Monica Lloyd and Jefferson Cleveland, and an intense investigation of an alleged attack of a black man by UMB police recently.

According to student spokesman Chris Alberto, Corrigan spent Tuesday in the office of UMass president David C. Knapp.

Cohen said Knapp told a group of UMB students at a meeting in Boston Monday he "could not make any decision" on the Bondy or tenure situations because both matters "were in grievance procedure." According to Cohen, Knapp urged the students to make "concrete suggestions" on the problems of campus government, which he "would consider." Cohen added that although there has been no ac-

Plane hijacked to Cuba

Associated Press

A man armed with an automatic pistol scaled a wall at a California airport yesterday, commandeered an American Airlines jetliner waiting to take on passengers and forced its crew to fly him to Cuba, authorities said.

The jet with only the hijacker and the seven crew members aboard first flew to Dallas-Fort Worth Regional Airport in Grapevine, Texas. It refueled and took off 47 minutes later for the 2½ hour flight to Havana, authorities said.

The plane landed at the Jose Marti Airport in Havana at 5:18 p.m. EST, Federal Aviation Administration spokesman Fred Farrar said in Washington. He said the crew would be allowed to leave Cuba for Miami, but it was not known when the return flight might be made.

The FAA said Cuban authorities had taken the hijacker into custody and were questioning him.

American Airlines spokesman Joe Moran in Dallas said the airline did not know when the plane and its crew would return. "Our concern is to get them out as quickly as possible," he said.

Food stamp funds low

SPRINGFIELD (AP) – It could be a long, hungry summer for many of western Massachusetts' 28,000 food stamp recipients, according to a Western Massachusetts Legal Services staffer.

Henry Korman said this week that unless Congress comes to the rescue, food stamp funds will be exhausted by the end of May.

Meanwhile, a spokesman for the state Welfare Department says food stamp recipients soon will be advised to "hold on as long as possible" to their April and May food stamps.

Even if Congress authorizes $2.7 billion to extend the food stamp program through September, the program may be the victim of budget cuts next year, Korman told a group of social service program officials.

Statistics prepared for their meeting showed that western Massachusetts households receive about $2 million per month in food stamps.

U.S. Agriculture Secretary Robert Bergland already has announced regulations to reduce food stamp benefits. He also has said that if Congress doen not extend the program by May 13, he will tell states to suspend June benefits.

Anderson drive slated

NEW YORK (AP) – General Motors heir Stewart Mott said yesterday he plans to mount a drive to put Republican presidential hopeful John B. Anderson's name on the Massachusetts ballot in addition to New Jersey and other states.

The wealthy contributor to liberal causes said during an interview from his New York office that he preferred to work within the framework of Anderson's campaign organization, but plans to put together a "network" if Anderson does not announce his intention to run as an independent by April 24.

Anderson spokesmen have viewed Mott's moves as separate from their campaign. The candidate himself has said he would not undertake an independent campaign if that would aid Ronald Reagan by drawing away votes from Presdient Carter.

April 24 is the deadline for filing 800 signatures for the Jersey ballot and is two weeks prior to the Massachusetts filing date.

A total of 39,000 signatures are needed for the New England state's ballot by May 2.

Two Soviets orbit

MOSCOW(AP) – The Soviet Union launched two cosmonauts into orbit yesterday and there was speculation they will extend greetings from a space station to athletes and spectators at the Olympic games in Moscow this summer.

The official Tass news agency said a record-holding adventurer and a rookie cosmonaut were launched to make repairs on Salyut 6, the station that has been in orbit 2½ years. The launch of the Sayuz 35 craft followed a record-breaking 175- day manned mission aboard the space station last year.

The last American manned space flight, by contrast, was in July 1975, when Thomas Stafford and Donald Slayton docked their Apollo 18 craft to the Soviet Soyuz 19 in a dramatic big power space linkup.

All systems aboard Soyuz 35 were functioning normally, Tass said, and the two cosmonauts were feeling good.

Soviet television carried pictures of the launch three hours after liftoff from the Baikonur space center in Central Asia. At liftoff, one of the cosmonauts could be heard jubilantly yelling the Russian word meaning "Let's go!"

Iranian cadets ousted

NORTHFIELD, Vt. (AP) – The U.S. Immigration and Naturalization Service yesterday ordered 85 Iranian students at Norwich University to leave the country by Friday midnight.

The school received the order from the local Immigration Service office in Burlington at 2 p.m. yesterday, according to college spokesman George Turner.

The order affects those Iranians at the small military school who are members of the Iranian Navy, Turner said. But he said 12 other Iranian students will be allowed to stay because they are not members of their nation's military.

"The students are making preparations for a hasty departure," Turner said. The U.S. State Department is treating the navy members as officials of Iran and has included them under its directive that all Iranian government officials leave the country, according to Wednesday's order. A similar order went out to Iranians attending The Citadel and Virginia Military Institute, Turner said.

Carter-Sadat talks end

WASHINGTON (AP) – President Carter wound up talks with Egyptian President Anwar Sadat yesterday with words of support for the Palestinians but no apparent decision on their future in Israeli held territory.

That, Carter said, will depend on his consultations here next week with Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin.

Carter stressed, however, that there must be "a recognition of the realization of Palestinian rights, a recognition that the Palestinians must have a voice in the determination of their own future."

The two leaders parted on the White House South Lawn with an exchange of tributes after three rounds of talks in two days.

Carter said he was "deeply grateful for what he (Sadat) adds to my ability to lead this country."

Sadat said difficulties in Iran and Afghanistan, and what he called "a threat" to the Persian Gulf, "should enhance the efforts for reaching an agreement upon the full autonomy for the Palestinians..."

But he and Carter made no claim of having overcome hurdles to formulating a Palestinian autonomy plan by the May 26 target date.

While Carter called his talks with Sadat constructive, he said "no decisions could be reached yet because Prime Minister Begin and the Israelis must be carefully consulted."

Diplomatic sources said they doubted, however, that the back-to-back visits by Sadat and Begin would produce an accord. These sources, asking not to be identified, said negotiations would be intensified and that Sadat was likely to return for further meetings next month.

So far, Egypt and Israel have been unable to define the "full autonomy" promised in their Camp David accord of September 1978 to the 1.2 million Palestinian Arabs living on the West Bank of the Jordan River and in Gaza. Those territories have been held by Israel since the 1967 Six-Day War.

At one point in his statment, Carter said there must be "a recognition of sovereign rights." But it was not clear whether he was calling for national powers for a Palestinian council, for the rest of the Arab world to join Egypt in recognizing Israel, or both.

Sadat, meanwhile, said he and Carter had "discussed and explored all possible alternatives to give momentum to the peace process."

Vance presses for sanctions

WASHINGTON (AP) – Secretary of State Cyrus Vance called the ambassadors of two dozen countries to the State Department yesterday as the United States pressed its allies to support new sanctions against Iran.

Department officials said the initial reaction of U.S. allies to the new sanctions, announced Monday by President Carter, was supportive.

But they could not yet cite specific cases where other governments have joined in any of the sanctions, intended to pressure Iran to release 50 Americans held hostage in the U.S. Embassy in Tehran.

U.S. officials said they felt it was still too early to expect action from allies, but said responses were expected late this week.

The United States has asked its allies to take "parallel steps" to match the Carter administration's four-point sanctions program, which included severing diplomatic relations with Iran and an embargo on all trade except food and medicine.

But there is no "check list" of countries willing to cooperate with the United States, said State Department spokesman David Passage. He said U.S. officials prefer that each ally decide on the basis of its own circumstances what actions to take.

Following yesterday's 45- minute meeting between Vance and the group of allied diplomats, Canadian Ambassador Peter Towe said his government already is doing about all it can.

State budget reviewed today

BOSTON (AP) – The House Ways and Means Committee will report its version of the state budget for the fiscal year beginning July 1 to the House floor today, an aide to Ways and Means Chairman John J. Finnegan said Wednesday.

The aide, Kathleen Sullivan, said the appropriations bill would not be in print until late this afternoon, at which time Finnegan would hold a briefing for members of the House.

As submitted by Gov. Edward J. King in January, the bill amounted to some $5.89 billion. Details on changes by Ways and Means were not available yesterday.

King, Finnegan and Senate Ways and Means Chairman Chester G. Atkins have said new taxes are not an option this year even though the state is experiencing a revenue squeeze. Making things even more difficult is the expected loss of federal-state revenue sharing.

Finnegan said in a recent interview that the cities and towns will be lucky to get as much local aid from the state next year as this year. King kept local aid at current levels, but Finnegan suggested that might have to be cut.

The Massachusetts Municipal Association issued a statement last week saying property taxes will go up significantly throughout the state without a local aid increase of at least $150 million.

Union Records going strong

By ED LEVINE
Collegian Staff

One year after its creation, Union Records Unlimited is a thriving, money-making, student-run business.

Founded on April 9, 1979 following the closing of the old Union Records Service, URU now claims to have serviced 13,500 students in sales of record albums, tapes and other music accessories.

Dan Salce, a junior economics major, took over URS in early March last year. The store was about to be closed by the Campus Center Board of Governors, who ran the store, due to mismanagement of funds.

"I found out the store was $6,000 in debt and made the decision to close the store," Salce said.

Soon afterwards Salce formed URU with the help of the Recognized Student Organization system and the Student Government Association's Economic Development Office.

"URS had no cash control, no inventory systems," Salce said "The first thing I did was to design new systems. I also hired Rich Moran (now SGA co-President) as my first bookkeeper."

Salce said URU did $16,000 in business and made $150 in profit during its first two months of operation at the end of last Spring semester. "By the end of the semester we carried an inventory of $8,000. Now we have an inventory of between $25 and $30,000," he said.

Salce said all profits made by URU are put back into the store for expansion. He said URU used to stock only rock and roll and soul records, where now it carries reggae, disco, jazz, direct-to-disc, pre-recorded tapes, cutout and import recordings. The store also carries music accessories, such as record cleaners and blank tapes, as well as various smoking paraphenalia, he said.

"The name 'unlimited' reflects the concept of being able to provide an unlimited variety of musical styles at student affordable prices," Salce said.

URU also sells tickets to Union Program Council concerts and Salce said over 8,000 tickets have been sold by the store.

"We provide students with educational opportunities in accounting, marketing, public relations, management and sales," Salce said, stressing the importance of URU as an educational as well as money-making enterprise.

Wimpouts ready

By SUSAN BERTMAN

"Snorky Maverick" will be there, and so will "Electra," "Roseman," and the "Missing Link." Wizards will cast their spells; jugglers will toss their balls; and clowns will perform for your entertainment. Lightening bolts and the Flaming Sun may bring you to the pot of gold or the brink of disaster. This is not a fantasy – it's "Inverse Reality," the fifth annual global Cosmic Wimpout Tournament and it all takes place this Saturday, April 12, at the Hatch. The first round begins at 11:00 a.m.

If you are not yet familiar with the game of Cosmic Wimpout, this is the best time to come down and learn. To play the game, a player attempts to score points by rolling numbers and specific symbol combinations of the Wimpout dice. The "Ultimate Answer" – a human rulebook – will travel from table to table in order to supply information and to settle any disputes that may occur.

First prize offered by the Amorphic Cosmic Wimpout Traveling Circus is a $750 stereo system or $500 in cash. Second prize is a satin Cosmic Wimpout jacket and traveling game. The Door prize (advance tickets only) is a $200 shopping spree at Blue Denim.

There will be trivia contests with prizes; a Kite Flying Exhibition (in the Hatch!?); and music supplied by WMUA. The party continues into the evening with performances by "Martian Highway," "North," and "Elixir."

Participants will also have the opportunity to star in the underground movie, "Inverse Reality," to be filmed the same day. So dress appropriately – anything and everything goes. The entrance fee for the entire day is $2. Tickets are now available at the Cosmic Wimpout Table on the Campus Center Concourse; at the Cosmic Wimpout Earth Headquarters, 11 College Street, South Hadley; or at the door.

SGA supports women's major

By STEVEN SEMPLE
Collegian Staff

The Undergraduate Student Senate last night approved motions to support women's studies as a major at UMass and to seek a rapid solution to the campus lighting problem.

Student Government Association co-President Richard Moran's bid to encourage funding and recognition of women's studies as an independent major drew unanimous support from the senate. The motion stated that "anything less than full support of the program is an infringement on the rights of all students to be able to pursue the education of their choice."

Moran said that, as a major, the program would be eligible for federal grants, and would "greatly benefit" UMass students.

"You wouldn't have to take the courses to benefit from this," Moran said. He said the program would have a positive effect on the University's reputation.

"It can separate us from the rest of the pack," he said.

Senator Mimi Turchinetz announced a rally Tuesday at noon outside the Student Union building to protest Chancellor Henry Koffler's "inability to satisfy our demands" for adequate student lighting.

Turchinetz said a demand for better lighting was submitted to former Chancellor Randolph Bromery in 1979. That demand, she said, is still on the chancellor's desk.

"Koffler has given us a proposal," Turchinetz said, but added that it was unacceptable because it only provided lighting for certain areas of the campus and ignored others. Koffler's plan, according to Turchinetz called for lighting of heavily travelled "corridors," but neglected to give attention to more remote areas of the campus.

Hampden future unclear

By RICHARD NANGLE
Special to the Collegian

Hampden Center in Southwest Residential Area should remain a student center.

That's what Kevin Mangan, Southwest Assembly treasurer, was saying at Tuesday's SWA meeting, anyway. "It's important that we keep the Hampden Center as a student center and not as a revenue producer," he said.

Among proposals for the center is the establishment of another University Store. The center annually runs on a deficit of $166,000, siad SWA Co-President Scott Shuster, adding that Gearge Beatty, vice chancellor for administration and finance is saying the center is not producing enough revenue.

The assembly discussed the possibility of removing the Food Stamp Office from the center, which would make way for revenue-producing businesses. Other than the store proposal, however, no clear-cut proposals have been made.

Five students, one of whom is on the assembly and two of whom are not Southwest residents, brought the store proposal up before the assembly. Beatty and Art Warren, head of auxillary services at UMass, apparently have taken the store proposal to hear. Beatty has jurisdiction over the center but cannot make any changes without going through the assembly and the Hampden Board of Governors.

Shuster, however, made it clear that the center "cannot compromise vital programming space." He said the bottom line was either to produce money for the debt service – which does not go back to the students – or to preserve the "vital programming space." Shuster feels that because the store's money would go to the University administration, the students would "lose out on the deal."

Co-President Bruce Levy reiterated his counterpart's sentiments, saying proposals – such as the store – would take up valuable study space. Levy said "Beatty is looking at dollar signs only and he and Warren have other motives behind their proposals." Beatty, contacted by telephone, had no comment.

Then Shuster made a motion that the assembly would "take any action necessary" to stop such administrative proposals as the store. It was carried unanimously, with two abstensions.

In other business, Levy said he talked with the administration and learned there would be one or two guests per resident allowed for this year's Spring Concert.

Spring Theatre Weekend at Fine Arts Center

By DEBBIE WALLACE
Collegian Staff

Celebrate the infant spring this weekend by treating yourself to theatrical entertainment. Spring Theater Weekend at Umass will feature a comedy thriller, a Kern-Hammerstein musical favorite, and a special theater workshop.

Two performances of "Showboat" a classic and beloved musical will be presented Sat. April 12, 3 and 8 p.m., at the Fine Arts Center. Starring in "Showboat" is Forrest Tucker, known to television audiences for his comedic portrayal in the long-running series F-Troop.

The kick-off of the weekend is a free 11 a.m. workshop at the Fine Arts Center East Gallery for those interested in musical theater. "Showboat's" director, choreographer, and producer-managers will discuss producing and touring large-scale musicals. Space is limited and can be secured by calling 545-0030, mornings only.

"Showboat" tells the story of men and women who live and work aboard the Cotton Blossom, one of the floating theaters that worked along the Mississippi during the 1880's. There are numerous high quality emotional songs such as "Ol' Man River," "Can't Help Loving Dat Man," "Only Make Believe" and "Why Do I Love You."

Drawing the weekend to a close on Sunday 8 p.m. the Fine Arts Center will present the highly acclaimed spell-binding thriller, "Deathtrap." Written by Ira Levin, the From Brazil," "Deathtrap has been called by ford Wives," and the more recent "Boys From Brazil." "Deathtrap has been called by critics, "the funniest thriller in ages."

"Deathtrap" is the story of Sidney Bruhl, a glib middle-aged playwright who has not had a hit in 18 years. He is suffering from acute writer's block and envies a guaranteed hit written by a brilliant newcomer. The fast plot is full of twists and turns that leave audiences on the edge of their seats.

Mystery plays have been an outstanding success on Broadway for over 60 years and "Deathtrap" is no exception. "Deathtrap" has been thrilling audiences for over 750 performances since its premiere February 1978.

For ticket information call the Fine Arts Center Box office at 545-2511. UMass students are eligible for half-price tickets for "Deathtrap." Group discounts and group dinner-theater packages are available.

was quoted as saying members of an Iraqi extremist party had confessed to meeting in Qom with Khomeini and to agreeing to a plan "for cooperation to carry out broad subversive acts in Iraq."

The two countries have been disputing Iran's occupation of three small islands at the entrance to the Persian Gulf which Iran seized in 1971 from what soon thereafter became the United Arab Emirates.

Iraq wants control of the islands returned to the Arab side of the gulf. The Iranian leaders say the islands are Iran's and that the islands will not be given back.

Observers said the threats by Khomeini and Ghotbzadeh to overthrow the Iraqi government did not necessarily mean Iran was planning a major attack, but there were fears the fighting would escalate further after the reported air battle.

tion taken against the students, Corrigan had met with the group earlier today.

In light of the recent occupation of UMass/Amherst Chancellor Henry Koffler's office last week, Cohen said she "did not believe the two occupations are related. The issues involved have no comparison. Although (UMB) students might have thought if the occupation worked at Amherst, it may work here."

Cohen said the university has made no move to evict the students, "but there has been destruction of property here" in the last few days," she added.

Cohen refused to comment on Corrigan's being evicted from a State House Black Caucus meeting by Rep. Mel King (D-Mattapan) yesterday in Boston.

Locally, UMass Student Senate Co-president Rich Moran accompanied a group of UMass student senators on a trip to Boston yesterday, to "show our support" for the occupying students, a senate spokesman said Tuesday night. UMB student spokesman Alberto said Tuesday night "he welcomed the support we are getting from you (UMass)", adding "we can help each other out" on such matters such as the occupation in the future.

GO TO ALE

The Big Reason Beer Drinkers Are Going To Ale.
Everyday, more beer drinkers are coming around to the very special taste of Ballantine Ale. That's because Ballantine Ale is brewed to be more hardy than beer, but not thick like a malt liquor. Sure, you can expect to pay slightly more, but then Ballantine Ale is brewed to be the best there is. When you're that good, you deserve to be America's largest selling ale.

Editorial/Opinion

Pinball madness

MICHAEL MARTINEAU

"Ever since I was a young boy, I played the silver ball. From Southwest to the C.C., I must have played them all."

—with apologies to Elton John

P. was a UMass student not unlike any one of the 25,000 UMass students that pass through this campus daily. He lived in a dorm, complained about the D.C. food belonged to an RSO group, partied too much. Except for one thing: P. had a problem. The doctors called it Pinball Madness.

It all began innocently enough. While he was still in high school he visited a friend on campus who took him to the arcade and treated him to a few games. P. played surprisingly well for a beginner. He won a few free games, and broke the high score on the machine he was playing. Soon afterwards, when he returned to campus as a student, he was spending most of his free time in the arcade.

Almost immediately, he was missing classes. He stopped coming home at night. Worse yet, the work study checks began disappearing. He became moody and sullen. His best friends suspected, but feared saying anything.

"They knew." He said later. "It got to the point where I couldn't stand having a quarter in my pocket. I stopped doing laundry. I withdrew my entire savings account from my bank in town, and had it changed to quarters. My friends started watching me. They made sure I never got near the Campus Center, Hampden Muncnies, or College Pizza, or Worcester Dining Commons. In short, they kept me away from every pinball machine on campus. I realized they were doing it for my own good, but I still resented it."

Finally, the whole climax to this ugly situation took place. Under cover of darkness, P. slipped out to the Hampshire Mall. He even went so far as to sell his high school class ring to support his binge. When he didn't return, the authorities were called. After a search of the entire area, taking nearly three days, police responded to a call about a disturbance in the Dream Machine arcade in the Hampshire Mall.

They arrived to find P. disheveled, unshaven, having neither eaten or bathed in-days, sobbing hysterically on top of the Paragon machine, beating his callused, bloodied fists on the glass.

After he was sedated and dragged off, it was found that he missed the high score for the day by a mere two thousand points because a ten-year-old boy had spilled a hot fudge sundae on his hand, causing him to tilt his fifth ball.

P. is in therapy now. He has calmed down a great deal, although bright, flashing lights upset him, causing him to shake and yell, "Tilt!" So, he is under constant observation. They say that he will be able to go home in a few months but, like an alcoholic, he will never be cured of Pinball Madness. Constant therapy seems to be the only answer, according to Dr. Ellijah Putz, author of the book, The Danger Signs: The Tilt Syndrome.

Dr. Putz adds, "If you have any friends who enjoy pinball, make sure they never play alone. That is the first biggest sign of a problem. If caught early enough, the patient may be saved."

Pinball Madness. It's no joking matter.

"Are you unbalanced?" he asked

MARIANNE MORETTE

It was Friday afternoon at the Blue Wall, and there was a good-sized crowd. The regular singer was giving away beer to contest winners at one end. The soap operas were over and the atmosphere in the section by the juke box was light-hearted. The music from the stage blended in with the buzzing of many conversations. As more people came in, it became difficult to find an empty table. Everyone seemed to be enjoying the day.

Suddenly I noticed a change in the singer's tone, bringing my attention to the lyrics he was singing to the tune of "Bye, Bye Blackbird." Instead of the old, familiar words, he sang "Bye, Bye Cherry." I called a friend's attention to the song as it went on, "wrap your legs around me a little tighter." Mercifully, the rest of the words escape memory, but those mentioned above were among the more subtle. The crowd up front was clapping and egging him on.

I was suddenly tense. A chill went up my spine. Because I am a woman and that song abused the privacy of a woman's first experience with sex, I felt violated. What had started as a pleasant drink with friends had turned into a brutal reminder that even in Amherst, Massachusetts in 1980, it is considered a joke that men treat women as sexual instruments and nothing else. The song said nothing of the woman's personality, or even her appearance, let alone her intelligence. She was nothing but a "cherry;" a symbol of a man's dominance over her and of her subjugation to his will, to his desire. There was no mention of emotion, aside from the apparent satisfaction felt by the man in the song at adding another mark to his scorecard.

Even more appalling to me than the song itself was that the crowd went along with it, obviously in on the "joke." I found nothing in the song funny, nor did the man sitting next to me, who was so angered by it that he strode to the stage and tossed the remainder of his beer into the singer's face. The song stopped momentarily as the man turned to leave. In a belated attempt at professionalism, the singer began to play again, wisely choosing another song. The man who had thrown the beer went back to his table, collected his coat and books, and walked out onto the concourse. Once the new song was finished, the singer made a few remarks about the family of his anonymous critic, and how he obviously couldn't take a joke, then went on with his set.

Disgusted, I walked out to the concourse, where a crowd had assembled around the beer-tosser. It was not a light-hearted crowd. One man stood poking his index finger into the beer-tosser's chest, half shouting, "Are you unbalanced?" The beer-tosser looked him straight in the eye and asked, calmly, "Are you?" The irony was lost on him. He continued poking until one of his companions knocked his hand away. Not one person in the all-male crowd would discuss the song which had started the incident. Instead, there was concern for the feelings of the singer, and worry that damage might have been done to his guitar, or that he could have been electrocuted as a result of the beer-tossing.

What of MY feelings, or those of the other women and men in the audience who believe that women are human beings, not just sexual machines? What of the damage done to ME, of the hours lost to the fear that I, too, might be treated as the woman int hat song.

What of the very real damage done to women raped on this campus because of the attitude expressed in that song; that a woman's body belongs not to her, but to any man who chooses to take it?

Of all the women who were at the Blue Wall last Friday afternoon, only one thanked the beer-tosser. No woman did anything to stop the song. Most just ignored the entire incident. Does this mean that they agree with the attitude of the song? Were they just not listening to the words? Or were they too intimidated by the mostly-male crowd to object? As far as I know, mine was the only complaint made to the management over the singer's choice of lyrics. Had I not been so stunned, I might have reached the stage before the beer-tosser, but what could I have done? What can be done, assuming that one beer tossed won't solve the problem, nor would fifty?

What CAN be done is that women and men who are concerned about the abusive attitude of songs like this can come to the Blue Wall this Friday during 'happy hour' and show their disapproval, should last week's performance be repeated.

Letters

The butler did it!

To the Editor:

This letter is in response to the recent Collegian review of "All that Jazz" and the not so recent review of "American Gigolo." Thank God I saw these films before the aforementioned critiques were printed. The premise for a proper review is to tell of a film's quality, under such criteria as cinematography, cohesiveness, direction, choreography, and screenplay. The author of these reviews should learn the difference between a review and a plot synopsis. The critic is responsible for giving us the artistry of a film and we the patrons are responsible for following the plot.

In both of the previous reviews we are informed of the last minute of the film, one minute that took one hundred and twenty minutes to properly introduce. Every film, even a bad film reserves the right not to have its ending revealed by some rhetoric 101 refugee.

So, please Collegian critics, stick to your usual styles of a movie review by being trite and derivative. Do the movie going public a favor and change your style of reviews, unless you're too busy telling little children that there is no such thing as Santa Claus.

The way I see it...

To the Editor:

Allow me to say that Michael Martineau has demonstrated an unusual gift for comedy and poetry at last semester's amateur nights at the TOC—perhaps even genius. Let me further add that he writes a fine review of artistic events. However, let's not see any more of his columns on the Editorial/Opinion page. Don't encourage him too much unless you want him to think that his viewpoint on things is The Viewpoint.

I don't buy it

To the Editor:

I find Bruce Karrh's rebuttal of my job bias claim insufficient to declaim my charges. While I am most pleased that the black sickle cell tests are for the employee's benefit (maybe even to furter the anthropological study of the trait), Karrh goes on to contradict himself and strengthen my claim.

If Du Pont is committed to ensuring a safe work place, why are amino and nitro compounds so prevalent as to warrant these genetic tests? How does Mr. Karrh justify this "medical program" as "employment benefit" when the program is used in "influencing job placement?"

Rather, I see a misuse of this medical program allowing the Du Pont corporation to justify unsafe work areas. It is time to hold corporations responsible for the release of toxins which affect the health of all Americans. This responsibility starts in the work place.

Women taught defense

By SIOBHAN BREEN
Collegian Staff

"I want to learn to take care of myself...to defend myself," was the reason most women gave for attending a self-defense workshop offered by the Orchard Hill/Central Residential Area Women's Center.

Presently the University offers a large number of self-defense courses, colloquia, and workshops for women. Several one-credit courses are offered through the Physical Education Department, some of which are co-ed. Southwest Residential College offers a colloquium series for both beginners and intermediate students, and the Orchard Hill/Central Women's Center is sponsoring a six-week workshop in self-defense.

"The course gives women a sense of confidence if they believe they can defend themselves," said Diane Damelio, a second degree brown belt in Karate, who instructs two Physical Education women's self defense classes and co-teaches the Orchard Hill workshop.

The course teaches how "to get out of grabs, holds and then be able to run," but, stressed Damelio, "it also teaches how not to walk and act like a victim, and what a confrontive situation is." One student admitted that she joined the class out of fear.

One wonders if a false sense of security coud develop in a woman after taking only a semester of self defense. Damelio does no believe it could. "We try to make them really think that they may be attacked," she said. "If they get unrealistic we show them in class they're not invincible."

In the all-women atmosphere of her classes, Damelio feels women talk more openly about their fears and strengths, and build a comradery. "They are learning and growing," she said, "not competing."

The class does spend time on conditioning, endurance, and strength building, but concentrates on surprising the attacker by being faster and having more endurance, she pointed out.

"It is from a different type of perspective...a women's perspective," said Damelio when comparing her class to the co-ed classes. "Studying only with women to start with builds confidence," she said.

In the school committee race, Fran Wall and Casey Clark secured the two available committee positions, compiling 1860 and 1765 votes respectively. Roger D. Front followed with 879.

Also, UMass Dean of Students William F. Field, running unopposed for the office of Town Moderator, received 2090 votes. Breast cancer studied

By LINDA PLAUT
Collegian Staff

According to current statistics, the American Cancer Society predicts that one of every fourteen American women will develop breast cancer in her lifetime.

In terms of incidence and mortality, the breast remains the foremost site of cancer and death in American women. The recent widespread public awareness and concern over breast cancer is not without due cause, nor has it come too soon.

Although a 1976 Gallup poll revealed a high level of awareness of breast self-examination, only one women in four in 1977 actually practiced monthly self-examinations, while another 25 percent said they did not examine their breasts at all.

The International Journal of Health Education states that nothing in our knowledge of breast cancer, so far, offers much prospect for prevention; rather the main hope of influencing mortality is earlier detection and prompt treatment.

A 1973 Gallup survey revealed the failure of many physicians to examine their patients. Among women who saw a gynecologist regularly, less than half said their breasts were examined routinely.

Breast examination by a physician is a routine part of an annual physical examination, meaning that women who do not practice self examination go a year between breast examinations. Women are instructed to examine themselves on a monthly basis, usually after the end of their menstrual period. Monthly examinations would reduce to a minimum the time period during which undetected growth might occur, according to the National Cancer Institute.

The Journal of Chronic Diseases reports that a woman would be more sensitive to any change in her body since she is most familiar with its characteristics. A physical examination is estimated at only 70 percent accuracy.

The American Cancer Society says it is possible for women to conduct a highly effective self-examination of the breast by gently and systematically probing and exploring all parts of the breast and adjacent tissue. As many as 95 percent of breast cancers are found through breast self-examination.

The American Journal of Nursing states that early detection and treatment of breast cancer are mandatory and are the responsibility of both the patient and medical profession.

Zimmer: Sox have good chance in East

By DAVE O'HARA
AP Sports Writer

WINTER HAVEN, Fla.—After six weeks of training, the last on a voluntary basis, the Boston Red Sox are set for the American League Season, determined to upset the odds in the tough East Division.

"We're ready," said Manager Don Zimmer before breaking camp and heading for Milwaukee and the 1980 opener today. "Whatever happens at the start we'll have no excuses."

Like most other observers, Zimmer is impressed with the Red Sox' new image. The players banded together after cancellation of exhibition games last week.

Suddenly, it appeared, the country club attitude disappeared. There dawned unusual team spirit. Players became relaxed, spirited and fun-loving while working hard daily in voluntary practice.

There's a positive attitude heading into the season. If there's any pressure, it's felt by only one player-veteran catcher Carlton Fisk. The big slugger still can hit, but he didn't test his throwing arm in a single exhibition game and remains a question mark.

Fisk, who caught only 35 games last year because of a baffling right elbow ailment, is on his own. He'll play when he tells Zimmer he's ready. Because of his status, the Red Sox went out and acquired veteran receiver Dave Rader, who will platoon with sophomore Gary Allenson.

"I think we've got a good chance to win our division this year," Zimmer said. "With Fisk we'll have a better chance. If he tells me he can play 80 games, he'll catch 80 games. If he tells me 105 times, he'll play 105 games. Otherwise, we'll go with Allenson and Rader."

In addition to Rader, the Red Sox will start with four other newcomers—slugger Tony Perez and relief ace Skip Lockwood, both picked up in the free agency market, and rookies Bruce Hurst and Glenn Hoffman.

Perez and 40-year-old Carl Yastrzemski will share first base and the designated hitter role. Lockwood, healthy after arm trouble last year, is counted upon to give Dick Drago and Tom Burgmeier help in the bullpen while Bill Campbell tries to get ready while officially disabled.

Well, the baseball season has just started and players are already complaining to umpires. Chris Chambliss of the Atlanta Braves questions Frank Pulli's call in yesterday's 9-0 loss to the Cincinnati Reds. (AP Laserphoto)

Sampson to Celtics?

HARRISONBURG, VA. [AP]—The owner and general manager of the Boston Celtics both say they are optimistic that 7-foot-4 University of Virginia freshman Ralph Sampson will forego his final three years of college and sign with the Celtics.

But Sampson's mother, Sarah, says she doesn't know what her son will do.

"It depends on Ralph now," she said following a two-hour meeting Tuesday night with Celtics owner Harry Mangurian and general manager Red Auerbach. "He'll have to make up his own mind."

Women don't rate

A sports column in yesterday's Collegian pointed out that women's professional sports do not get the media recognition and fan support that their male counterparts get. This is true. But there is a very good reason for this situation:

Women athletes are second-class citizens when it comes to professional sports. They are not as talented as men and the events which they participate in are not as well-played. This combination makes women's professional sports less interesting to watch and read about.

Don't misunderstand. I have all the respect in the world for any athlete, male or female, professional or amateur, who has the guts to become the best he/she can be. But the reality of the situation is that women's sports, although not always boring, cannot compare to the quality of men's competition.

Yesterday's article stated that (pitifully) only 525 people showed up to watch the professional Women's Basketball League championship game over the weekend in New York. Of course it was a small crowd. Why should a New York basketball fan, or any fan for that matter, spend his time at a women's game when he has grown accustomed to seeing the New York Knicks of the National Basketball League, or this year's NBA playoffs? Why should he pay attention and money to the WBL when he could go to the nearest YMCA and see more talent ina local pick-up game? Ann Meyers, the most talented woman basketball player to ever come out of the college ranks, couldn't even make the roster of an NBA team (Indiana Pacers) never mind play regularly in the men's league.

Name almost any professional sport and it's overwhelmingly clear that men are more talented in their field than women (I say "almost" because I rarely deal in absolutes). Women's tennis is slower and less powerful than men's; women golfers play on shorter courses; basketball is less aggressive and slower in the women's league; women's football is a joke compared to men's; etc.

The print media is a reflection of society. Sports pages are filled with what editors think is of the most interest to the most people. If people cannot get interested in women's athletics to the same degree that they do for men's (because women perform less well) who should newspaper devote the same amount of space to them. It would be like a city editor devoting as much space to a small brush fire as he does to a major hotel fire; or an arts page playing up a local high school play when the Bolshoi Ballet was in town. It wouldn't make sense.

Part of the reason why women's sports and female athletes are inferior quality-wise is obvious. Our society has treated women as anything but equals throughout history, athletics included, and women's sports have definitely suffered. Women were not given the same opportunities as men to excel in athletics, and the results are today's inequities.

This does not mean that women's sports today are in and of themselves bad, or that they will not improve. Women athletes are just as competitive as men, just as disciplined, and someday both sexes will be able to compete at the same level of ability.

But not for a long while. The day Sue Peters, UMass' softball ace and Julius Erving play-alike, plays basketball in front of a packed house at Madison Square Garden will be the day they pass out one-hundred dollar bills at the ticket gate.

Linksters prep for season opener

By BOB MITCHELL
Collegian Staff

Every year about this time, golfers ranging from novices to professionals start to dig their clubs out of the hall closet in preparation for another season.

Within this group lies the collegiate golfer. The University of Massachusetts, like any other institution of higher learning, has its golf enthusiasts.

This UMass contingent, better known as the UMass men's golf team, travels to Providence today to compete against the Friars and the Lord Jeffs of Amherst College in the opening match of the spring season.

The Minutemen enter the 1980 spring season with their heads up. Although the local linksters have had few practice rounds leading up to today's match, Coach Ed Vlach believes his squad should perform well.

The UMass team is composed of eight returning veteran players. Senior Captain Mark Duggan heads the list along with junior Tony Kelley. The team will also depend heavily on the services of junior Marty Hunt and freshman Steve Midttun. Senior Bob Robichaud, sophomores Bob Gladchuck and Joe Tamsey and freshman Rich Murphy round out the list of returning players.

Vlach, who normally carries a roster of 10 golfers, said he will choose two from the many candidates after this week's practice rounds at Hickory Ridge C.C. in South Amherst. "However, if the caliber of the candidates is not good enough, we will go with what we have," said Vlach. "If they are high caliber players I will add more than two; it is flexible."

Vlach does believe his team can and will perform well, but stressed that his club has had little practice. "We are going down there (Providence) cold," he said. "Amherst spent nine or 10 days in Scotland playing 36 holes a day, and Providence has been playing for three or four weeks, our course just opened Monday."

Laxmen host Vermont

The UMass men's lacrosse team makes its home debut on Boyden field today at 3:00 p.m. as it takes on the Catamounts on the University of Vermont. The Gorillas currently 1-1 are ranked 14th in the nation, dropping a notch from 13th last week.

Vermont, on the other hand, is unranked nationally and in New England is 2-0, is termed by UMass mentor Dick Garber as "an in between team" playing Division 1 and 2 opponents. "They play a lot of Division 2 teams but are still considered in Division 1. Vermont's wins include a 20-10 win over the University of Hartford and an 18-5 win over St. Michael's College.

Garber, cautious optimist, is expecting a big score for his team but is concerned about the weather. "When you have a wet field, it can sometimes even the game up. We're gearing up because after this game the next three (Rutgers, BC and Brown) will have a large effect on our ranking. We've been dropping in the standings because we haven't been playing. The layoff is bad for us."

After demolishing UConn last Wednesday 26-1, the Gorillas are prepared for a similar outcome against a perennially weak Catamount team. Vermont has fielded a team for just two seasons.

Netman away

After an opening season loss last Thursday at the hands of Tufts University the UMass men's tennis team will try to turn things around today when it faces MIT in an away match at 3 p.m.

Coach Steve Williams said yesterday he is still unsure of today's lineup because rain cancelled practice Monday and Tuesday.

Players seeing action today will most likely be captain Dove Nowak, Sergio Strepman, Mark Huetteman, Matthew Modlish, Dan Gallagher, Neil MacKertish and Rich Sontag.

"We usually have a pretty close match with MIT," Nowak said. "Last year we won 5-4."

MIT took a spring trip this year and did pretty well," according to MIT assistant sports information director Bob Simmons.

Spikers host Chiefs

New England power Springfield College will come to NOPE gym tomorrow night to take on the UMass men's volleyball teams.

The Chiefs, who are among the region's top teams are 1-0 in regular season play against UMass, though falling to UMass at the Invitational at the University of Rhode Island last month.

UMass is on top in Division One of the New England Collegiate Volleyball League, losing only to the University of New Hampshire earlier this season. In the Eastern Collegiate Volleyball League, UMass has a 3-3 record, including a loss against Springfield.

The matches begin at 7:00 p.m., when the JVs will lock horns. The JVs are in second place in Division Two of the NECVL and lost to Springfield in a closely played match last month.

The varsity match is scheduled for 8:00 p.m.

On Sunday afternoon, UMass will host the team from Mass. Institute of Technology. That match will begin at 1:00 p.m. Boston University will also play.

Legislative committee underbids UM budget

By MARC FAGELSON
Collegian Staff

The House Ways and Means Committee yesterday unveiled their recommendations for the state's $5.9 billion 1981 budget and underbid many of Governor Edward J. King's recommendations for the University's allotment.

The committee's recommendation includes job cuts on the Boston campus, a cut of over $8 million from the Amherst campus's permanent personnel fund and lower allotments for all the campuses than King's recommendation of a month ago. It may possibly cut funds for the teaching Hospital at the UMass Medical School in Worcester.

In the University's request, $89.5 million was alloted for the Amherst campus. Gov. King recommended $86.2 million for the campus, but the committee's figure was less than $76.5 million. The campus was budgeted $84.7 million this year.

Student aid, which was underbid by Gov. King more than 30 percent from the University's request, was unchanged by the committee. They coincided with the Governor on their library recommendation, which was over 24 percent less than was requested.

"Last year, the committee's figures were pretty frightening too," Ken Moore, a member of the Student Center for Educational Research and Advocacy said yesterday. "There is no figure for the teaching hospital which leads one to believe that they won't receive funding," he added.

By making a special account for the Amherst campus's permanent personnel fund, the committee will have control over the positions involved, Moore said. "Something like this could destroy the administration's autonomy," he said.

Enough?

The committee's influence will be felt most on the Boston campus, Moore said. Cuts there will result in nine less administrative jobs by Jan. 1, 1981, he said.

From the committee, the figures go to the House, where they will be debated on the floor late next week. When the House completes its recommendation, the figures will be submitted to the State Senate.

Moore said the committee's figures, although alarming, are not the end of the world. "The Senate's recommendations will be more reasonable if the past is any indication," he said.

A compromise between the two will result in the finished budget sometime in June, Moore said.

Student occupation at UMass/Boston continues

Administration takes no action

By BRIAN O'CONNELL
Collegian Staff

With University administrators making no moves to either meet with or evict the 50 students occupying the offices of UMass-Boston, Chanceller Richard Corrigan, a University spokesperson, said yesterday the students spent the third day of the occupation "playing guitars and singing songs together."

According to UMB Public Relations Director Carolyn Schneider, no action has been implemented by the administration and business is being conducted as usual outside the Chancellor's offices.

The students occupied the offices Tuesday morning, saying they wouldn't leave until their demands were met. The students are demanding 51 percent student control of all UMB government bodies, the reinstatement of recently released Assistant-Vice Chancellor Heina Bondy, tenure granted to professors Monica Lloyd and Jefferson Cleveland, and an investigation into an alleged attack of a black man by campus police.

According to a student spokesman, Corrigan spoke to the group at the occupation site Wednesday, and said he did not feel students were ignored at campus government meetings. "I would be surprised to hear of a governing body anywhere else in this country with a higher percentage of students involved in campus politics," he said.

Responding to the demand for 51 percent student control of government, Corrigan said: "You are asking whether as Chancellor I want to give up the powers I have, and the answer is no."

Protestors' 'spirit of unity'

By MICHAEL SILVA
Collegian Staff

"The spirit of unity among students in Chancellor Corrigan's office was so strong it could lift you off the floor," Student Government Association Co-president Rich Moran said at Wednesday's Undergraduate Student Senate meeting.

Moran, along with Mary Henderson of the Student Center for Educational Research and Advocacy and student senators Mike Ferrigno and Freeman Woodson journeyed to the UMass/Boston campus Wednesday in support of student occupation of UMass/Boston Chancellor Richard Corrigan's office.

"The place was going berserk. Everyone was chanting when we got there," Henderson said. "UMB is a commuter school. The students there have never been organized. This is the first big push for student rights at UMB and the students occupying Corrigan's office were pleased that we came to support them," Henderson said.

"This is the first step in having students tell administration what we want—what we're not going to take," Woodson said. "We (UMass) have to show Sisterhood, solidarity. We need unity across the state."

Each of the visitors to UMB stressed the importance of student unity across the state. "It's like we have cousins over there," said Ferrigno, who used to attend UMass/Boston.

Henderson said organizing with UMB is important because we have to work with them in the budget fight with the state legislature.

During the visit Wednesday, Corrigan

Kennedy says Carter's actions invite election of Reagan

WASHINGTON (AP) — Sen. Edward M. Kennedy declared yesterday that President Carter is running for a second term in a way that invites the election of Republican Ronald Reagan by promoting the notion that government doesn't work.

"We are informed that he is doing his best — and that it is impossible to do better . . ." Kennedy told the American Society of Newspaper Editors only a few hours after the president spoke from the same platform.

"We are asked to re-elect the incumbent on the basis that no one can do the job," the Massachusetts senator said.

Carter's challenger for the Democratic presidential nomination said such an appeal "might persuade the people and thereby lose the election" for the Democratic Party.

Carter vows action on boycott

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Carter said yesterday he is prepared to take legal action if necessary to prevent American athletes from participating in the Moscow Olympics this summer.

In a speech prepared for the American Society of Newspaper Editors convention in Washington, the president made it clear he does not consider the United States bound by a decision of the U.S. Olympic Committee, which meets this weekend to consider Carter's call for a boycott of the Summer Games.

Carter has demanded that Americans boycott the Moscow Games to protest the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan.

The president also defended his policy in the Iranian crisis and said Iran's leaders lack "the cohesion and resolve" to end the long stalemate over the holding of American hostages.

Tsongas fears energy disaster, calls for limited nuclear power

BOSTON (AP) — Sen. Paul E. Tsongas said yesterday that Massachusetts is unprepared to cope with energy problems, and he proposed a plan — including limited reliance on nuclear power — to protect the state from "imminent and potential disaster."

Tsongas, in a speech at the UMass Boston campus, said he drafted a 61-page document on energy solutions because of the "urgent need for serious public debate on Massachusetts' response to the energy crisis over the next two decades."

Although the Massachusetts Democrat has expressed reservations about nuclear power in the past, he said he now anticipates a need for additional nuclear plants to replace dependence upon oil late in the decade.

Tsongas said the state will have to turn to nuclear or coal temporarily because solar, hydro, and wind power and other forms of energy will not be widespread enough to meet the state's energy demand quickly.

Iranian and Iraqi forces clash, Baghdad gov't raps Khomeini

By The Associated Press

Iranian and Iraqi forces, supported by helicopters, exchanged artillery and mortar fire across their troubled border yesterday , Tehran radio reported. It said the Iranian command dispatched ships into the northern Persian Gulf to guard against "any aggression" from Iraq.

Iran's news agency reported a bomb blast killed one person and wounded 20 in the southwestern port city of Abadan, near Iraq. It blamed the Iraqis.

The Baghdad government, calling on other Arab nations to rally behind it against Iran, denounced revolutionary leader Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini in bitter terms.

"This crazy, racist Khomeini is nothing but a turbaned shah," the official Iraqi News Agency said in an editorial.

The government-run Tehran radio said 14,000 Iranians expelled from Iraq by the Baghdad government had poured across the border into the western Iranian province of Ilam, and 11,000 more had arrived in Kermanshah province, just north of Ilam.

Tensions between the Mideast neighbors, which have long been antagonistic, erupted into violence earlier this week, when Iran reported cross-border assaults by small bands of Iraqi troops.

Khomeini and other leaders of Iran's Islamic-oriented revolutionary government called on Iraqis to overthrow their secular, socialist regime, headed by President Saddam Hussein. The two countries have conflicting territorial claims, and the friction has been heightened by turmoil among the Kurdish ethnic minority that overlaps the border and among the Arabs of southwest Iran.

Most of the fighting has centered on an area near the Iranian border town of Qasr-e-Shirin, some 300 miles west of Tehran and 90 miles northeast of Baghdad.

Tehran radio said the exchanges continued Thursday for the third day. An Iranian commander in the area said Iraqi artillery fire — reaching as far as seven miles into Iran — had damaged a police post and destroyed three peasant houses, Tehran Radio said.

Allies demand hostage release

By The Associated Press

Western European nations told their Tehran ambassadors yesterday to "demand" that Iran release the 50 U.S. Embassy hostages. The toughly worded declaration by the nine Common Market nations stopped short of joining in U.S. sanctions against Iran, but it hinted that some action might be taken later.

In Tehran, meanwhile, the Moslem militants holding the embassy made a new death threat against their American prisoners, captive for 159 days.

The hostages will be "destroyed" if Iraq invades Iran, a militant identified only as "Habib" told NBC-TV in an interview.

Iran and Iraq are engaged in a fresh round of border hostility and each has accused the other of acting on behalf of U.S. "imperialists."

The Iranian military said yesterday the border region had been quiet since artillery and small-arms skirmishing in Iran's Kermanshah province Wednesday, but it ordered Iranian naval units to leave the port of Abadan and cruise the northern Persian Gulf to "counter any aggression" by the Iraqis.

Library Task Force issues report, options

By LAURIE FULLERTON
Special to the Collegian

The Library Task Force, recently appointed by UMass Chancellor Henry Koffler, has issued a report detailing various options concerning the future of the main library tower and Goodell, which is now being used as a temporary library.

The report gives seven options which will be reviewed by several campus organizations, such as the Graduate and Undergraduate Student Senates and the Faculty Senate Library Committee. These organizations have until May 1 to respond to the report, at which time their recommendations will be passed on to Koffler.

The first option consists of returning all materials and operations to the main library, which would not involve major construction costs.

A second option would put all materials on six floors of the main library, requiring the installation of two new floors, a third floor and a sixth. This would entail major construction costs of between $750,000 and $1 million, the r[illegible]id

The third option suggested by the task force is to maintain a reserve reading section in Goodell while returning the remainder of the materials to the main library.

The rest of the options deal with the establishment of a basic collection for undergraduate students and a research collection for graduate students and faculty in various areas of both the main library and Goodell. The report cites disadvantages with these proposals because some materials and catalogues would be duplicated and materials would be separated between the two buildings.

The report did not recommend one proposal over any other, but did conclude, however, that each change would involve considerable cost.

Members of the Library Task Force include Associate Chancellor Terrence Burke, the chairperson of the task force, Dean of Fine Arts and Humanities Richard W. Nolan, Director of Libraries Richard J. Talbot, Dean of Social and Behavioral Sciences Thomas Wilkinson, Dean of Students William F. Field and Director of University Planning Jack Littlefield.

Tillson suit moves slowly

By MARC FAGELSON
Collegian Staff

The amount of paperwork in the state's $7 million suit against the engineering firm that built the inoperative $10 million Tillson Farm power plant at UMass may prevent the case from going to court for close to a year, Assistant State Attorney General Paul Good said yesterday.

"A case of this type, if it goes along at its normal speed, would not be ripe for trial for at least a year, maybe more," Good said. "The complete trial would probably take several months," he added. The suit was filed march, 1979.

Members of the Civil Bureau Edward Quinland and Edward Vena are gathering the facts of the case, Good said. They are working with depositions and are consulting experts in the field, primarily construction engineers. Within the next three months, the case should become more visible, Good said.

The suit was filed by State Attorney General Francis X. Bellotti against the Jackson and Morehead engineering firm. It charges the firm with negligence and breach of contract in the construction of the oil-burning plant.

Tillson Farm was conceived in 1969 as a product of the University's expansion in the early 70's. Construction was finished in 1974 at a cost of $8 million. Steam from the plant, which would have generated the electricity, was to be carried through a $3 million system of lines.

The lines never held the steam well enough to generate sufficient power, however, and the plant was closed after an eight month test-run. It has not yet been reopened.

The University is maintaining the plant in an effort to keep it in shape should a solution to the problem be found, Director of Facilities Planning Jack Littlefield said yesterday.

Three years ago, the UMass Board of Trustees voted to "mothball" Tillson as a preventative maintenance measure. Pipes are heated during winter months by space heaters, and the drive shafts in the generators are rotated monthly, Littlefield said. He had no estimate for the yearly cost.

Concert tickets

Guest tickets for this year's Spring Concert, scheduled for May 10 in Alumni Stadium, will go on sale Wednesday, April 16.

Bob Humphreys, administrative coordinator for the Union Program Council, the concert's promoters, said the change was made in order to allow time for University officials to determine how to distribute 3500 passes to guests who will be allowed into the dormitories for the weekend of the show.

The tickets will be sold for $15 each at the Fine Arts Center Box Office from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. Students must have a current University ID to pick up the tickets, which will be limited to two per person.

Student tickets will be distributed from the Hampden Student Center in Southwest beginning Monday, April 21.

Student volunteers sought as Big Brothers/Sisters

By KEVIN BERG
Collegian Staff

Two staff members form James House in Southwest are looking for students interested in being a "Big Brother" or "Big Sister" to area children who lack one of their parents.

Resident Assistant Richie Goldman and Head of Residence Dave Milestone are organizing the referral service in connection with the Companion Program centered in the Bangs Community Resource Center in Amherst.

The program involves being a "Big Brother" or "Big Sister" to a resident of Amherst or Northampton between the ages of 5 and 15. Students who participate in the Program will make a two-semester commitment to go out with their boy or girl at least once a week for a few hours.

Andi Fiske, program director, said she encourages activites that don't involve money such as playing softball or other sports, going on picnics or hikes, and attending campus events.

Volunteers for the program undergo a screening process which Fiske termed "extensive." This involves a minimum of two interviews, local references, and a one-shot training program. Parents also help in the process by deciding whether or not they want their child to spend time with that particular volunteer.

The program itself has been in existence for 6 years, and UMass students have been involved with it as volunteers from the start. The program serves about 120 children in the community each year, although not always on a one-to-one basis—some group sessions are held at the center in Amherst.

The program's staff is a small one, consisting only of Fiske and two UMass interns. "We need more money, more volunteers, and more staff members to supervise these volunteers, Fiske said, adding that she doesn't do a lot of recruiting for the program because there is a waiting list of about 50 kids.

After learning of the program, Goldman and Milestone decided to make students aware of its existence and tell them whom to contact at the Bangs Community Resource Center. "We'll be acting as a sort of liaison between the campus and the program," Goldman said.

"On weekends students just sit around or watch ball games," Goldman said, "This will not only give them the chance to help someone, but will also give them an opportunity to do something worthwhile with their time and provide a service to the community as well."

According to Goldman, there are no real pre-reqoisites for the program, but at the same time there are a lot of expectations. They aren't looking for people who are trying to make their resumes look better and are just going to call up and say they can't make it that week. "People interested must be dedicated," he said.

Although the program will be starting in the fall, Goldman and Milestone want a list of names now so they can get right into the training at the beginning of September. Students intersted in more information should contact Goldman or Milestone, or call Fiske at the Bangs Community Resource Center.

"We need as many people, both male and female, as possible," Fiske said.

The Third World Women's Center

Education, Creativity, Unity

The Third World Women's Center, originally the Union of Third World Women in Baker dorm, was created 6 years ago by a group of undergraduate women, to deal with the problems they confront in the predominately white male society of UMass. Today, the Third World Women's Center is located on the fourth floor of New Africa House. The objectives of the Center include:

1. Providing a base for political, social, cultural and educational activities for Third World Women.

2. Developing and utilizing the creativity of Third World people in activities that contribute to the positive development of Third World Women.

3. To create and maintain a sense of unity among Third World Women through ACTION.

4. Providing support to other Third World organizations in order to make a stronger community.

The activities of the Center this year included: Co-sponsoring a workshop on Repression with the Third World Women's Task Force, showing the film Richard Pryor Live, organizing the Third World Organizational Fair (Beyond the Classroom) and supporting various activities for the community (ie: Solos & Duos, Martin Luther King Week).

Right now, the Center is in the process of preparing for next year. There will be 4 positions open: President, Vice-President, Secretary, and Treasurer. Two are workstudy, two are nonworkstudy. It is also possible to receive from 1-3 credits for your active participation. Since the Center is an R.S.O. group, it is in the process of having the budget (over $3,000 for 1980-1 Fiscal year) passed for next semester.

The Center was created by and for Third World Women, so your ideas, support, and criticisms are important for the Center's further development. Representatives from the Center will be in your area before the end of the semester, so feel free to come to any of the meetings. We will be looking for people intereted in any of the 4 positions, receiving credit for participation, or come if you're just interested in finding out more about The Third World Women's Center.

Don't miss Angela Davis

Runaway shops, inflation, racial discrimination, the threat of war — these are the real issues facing the American people in the 1980 Presidential campaign. Democrats and Republicans alike systematically fail to address these issues adequately, offering little choice and no lasting solutions. On Saturday, April 12th, Angela Davis, Communist Party Vice-Presidential candidate will speak on these and other important topics at the University of Massachusetts Student Union Ballroom at 3:00 PM. Ms. Davis, and her Presidential running mate Gus Hall, present a clear alternative to the politics-as-usual of big business. Their "People Before Profits" platform points the way toward new political directions in the coming decade.

Ms. Davis is a professor and long-time leader in the struggle for the democratic rights of all Americans. She is currently co-chairperson of the National Alliance Against Racist and Political Repression, an organization which grew out of the struggle against her own persecution as a noted Communist and Black activist. It is significant that over the past decade, the slogan has changed from "Free Angela" to "Vote for Angela".

Women seek program status

By DEBBIE ROBERTI
Collegian Staff

Faculty and students in the Women's Studies program last night passed a vote demanding that Chancellor Henry Koffler make a decision concerning the status of the Women's Studies Program by May 1st. Supporters also stated that "to remain as we are (under the Bachelor's Degree with Individual Concentration program) will be considered a negative response, and actions will be taken against such a decision."

At an emergency meeting, the faculty and students said another major concern was the "gradual erosion of women faculty" in the Women's Studies Program. As of now, three of the professors plan to leave at the end of the semester. This will result in an overload of work for the remaining faculty because the administration is unable to replace the professors who have left the Women's Studies Department.

Last week five Women's Studies Majors went to Koffler with a petition of over 1,000 signatures. "I think that he was impressed by the signatures," stated one of the students, "and he said it was meaningful that we had such strong student support."

"Our worst fear," said Cathy Portuguese, "is that our program will be completely wiped out, However, the most likely outcome could be that the Chancellor will decide to keep the Women's Studies Program under BDIC, give up no faculty replacements, and cut down our budget even more."

So far, both the Faculty and Undergraduate Student Senate have voted to support continuation of the Women's Studies Program. They also favor making Women's Studies a major rather than keeping it under BDIC.

The group plans to set up tables in the Campus Center next week to generate support for their cause. They do, however, need people to operate these tables. On Monday, Women's Studies majors will be in all four of the Dining Commons, encouraging students to send letters and postcards to the Chancellor.

This album, as with past Mangione records, contains the light, soothing rhythm and spicy interspersal of percussion, woodwind, and string that has delighted Mangione fans for years.

"Unity" in UMass/Boston student takeover

The Undergraduate Student Senate at the University of Massachusetts at Amherst voted unanimously and emotionally in favor of a motion to support the students at the University of Massachusetts at Boston who have taken over their Chancellor's Office to show their disgust with the University of Massachusetts' institutionalized racism and sexism. There were four specific incidents which triggered the takeover of Corrigan's Office, they include:

1. The firing of two black professors whose respective departments suggested the University put on Tenure.
2. The firing of a female professor who looked into the complaints of 14 different female students, each of whom said they were sexually harassed by the same individual at the University's Health Services.
3. The firing of a student advocate, assistant Vice-Chancellor Heinz Bondy, without reason.
4. A recent assault of a black student by University police, which student and faculty witnesses claim was without cause and which has not been investigated.

Besides the correction of these four isolated incidents, the students are also requesting they be given a 51 percent student control of campus government. The 150 students occupying U.Mass/Boston Chancellor Corrigan's Office cited a recent takeover of the U.Mass/Amherst Chancellor's Office, which was also centered around the University's racism in its attempt to remove "Que Tal Amigos?" from its prime time slot on the partially University funded radio station.

"We would have never thought of taking over the Chancellor's Office if it hadn't worked for you first," said an unidentified student from U.Mass/Boston. U.Mass/Amherst Student Senate Speaker Linda Geary best summarized the feelings of the students of both campuses when she said, "I suddenly feel as if I have a whole mess of cousins across the State."

During the discussion of the takeover at U.Mass/Boston at last night's Student Senate meeting in Amherst, newly elected Student Government Association Co-President Rich Moran, who had just returned from Boston to observe the takeover, had these words to say: "The spirit of unity amongst students in Chancellor Corrigan's Office was so strong it could lift you off the floor. The students asked Corrigan for reasons for his recent actions in firing the Vice-Chancellor and the three professors, but he was only feeding them rhetoric because there are no reasons for the actions. The students didn't seem to mind the rhetoric too much, they were all smiling and I was smiling too, because they know, and I know, and most of you know what Chancellor Corrigan doesn't know: They won't be leaving Chancellor Corrigan's Office until their demands have been met."

Letters

Viewed but not seen

To the Editor:

We, the undersigned, wish to respond to the letter of Caroll McGrath et.al. concerning the showing of Andy Warhol's "Dracula" at Mahar Auditorium. They made a passing remark about the film's "content (and) subtle yet dangerous message," but went on without appearing to have the slightest notion of the point of the film.

We feel it is unfortunate that people fail to see the point of the film as other causes force them to tune it out. In hastily accusing the film of "robbing the female characters of their personhood," they fail to note it is the deliberate intent of the film to show an aristocratic family that is sinking deeper and deeper into decadency. The film is not saying that women like to be beaten, but that aristocracy is decadent.

We hope that in the future people will attempt to view such films on a higher level, and not allow themselves to close their minds before even seeing the film.

Bradley doesn't rate

To the Editor:

I am absolutely outraged by Dave Bradley's column in yesterday's Collegian concerning women's sports. His premise that "women athletes don't rate" and are thus unworthy of attention by the media and the public is totally unjustified, as well as narrow-minded. It is unrealistic to expect women athletes to be physical equals of their male counterparts in all respects. This is partly due to hormonal and sexual differences of which I am sure Mr. Bradley is well aware. In addition, societal pressures, lack of adequate facilities and coaching, and a need for media support and recognition have contributed greatly to the woman athlete's inferior status in professional and amateur sports. With obstacles like these, women cannot hope to reach the level of excellence that the men enjoy.

Obviously, Mr. Bradley is forgetting that nearly every one of today's popular professional sports once found itself struggling for media and public support—just as the WBL is doing now. If people had waited for every male professional team to reach the highest level of skill before even attending a game, there would be no NBA today.

The media AND the public are only now beginning to recognize women's athletics as a competitive and exciting alternative to men's sports. However, without support, women athletes will never even come close to the men's. The belief that because women are generally not as strong as men, women's sports are less exciting, is chauvinistic and illogical. Mr. Bradley's brand of irresponsible journalism is exactly the kind that has been instrumental in continuing the inferior status of women's sports.

Letters Policy

All letters should contain the author's name, address, and telephone number for verification. Telephone numbers will not be printed.

Obligedly American

To the Editor:

My letter is to commend Jackson Katz on his insights concerning "radicals" and "commies" in the Collegian, April 3. I hope it opened the eyes and minds of all those apathetic, ignorant, close-minded flag-wavers.

John Hancock had people like this in mind when he wrote in the Declaration of Independence, "...all experience hath shown, that mankind are more disposed to suffer, while evils are sufferable, than to right themselves by abolishing the forms to which they are accustomed."

People have shown by their apathy that they don't really care who's elected president. (What's the difference between Carter and Reagan anyway?) These are the same people who point their finger at the commies. They need to educate themselves to alternatives such as the Socialist Workers' Party, the Communist Party, and the Citizen's Party. I'm sure they won't find out about them by reading the Boston Globe.

The Declaration of Independence goes on to say that we, as citizens, have not only the right, but the obligation to rid ourselves of an abusive government. This is what people in the Third Parties are trying to do. It seems to me that these "radicals" and "commies" are more truly American than the guy named Joe sitting next to you at the Hatch.

Concert insecurities

To the Editor:

The Southwest Security Review Board would like to respond to SGA Co-Presidents Brian Burke and Rich LaVoice's letter to the Editor appearing in the Thursday, April 3rd Collegian.

The letter quotes a memo stating that we, "were able to verify that a tight security system was maintained throughout Southwest for the entire weekend of last year's Spring Concert." It is important to point out to the UMass community that the reason the security system was "tight" was because of a combined effort of residential staff (HR's, RA's, etc.), dorm government members, and concerned resident volunteers who put in an extraordinary amount of hours working to compensate for the lack of adequate security funding.

It is unfair to expect that residential staff and concerned students take what is almost full responsibility to meet much greater security needs resulting from the UPC Spring Concert. It is a well known fact that the number of overnight visitors on Spring Concert weekend doubled the populations of the Southwest residence halls. This overwhelming increase of people in the dormitories did, in fact create some very dangerous situations, especially in the area of security. Those who worked IN the dormitories can attest to this fact.

Since UPC is responsible for the occurence of Spring Concert, it follows that they should also assume the financial responsibility of insuring that ALL UMass residents can SAFELY enjoy the weekend.

Southwest Residential College has expressed to UPC what it feels UPC's financial responsibility should be in meeting increased security needs for Spring Concert. If, in fact, as Mr. Burke and Mr. LaVoice contend, UPC is "willing to work with the residential life staff in order to organize an effective security system," the first step in the process is for UPC to take responsibility for all aspects of the concert weekend seriously.

Trustee surprises

To the Editor:

My R.A. recently told myself and some floor members about a very upsetting rumor. It seems the trustees have decided that, from now on, all belongings will have to be removed from dorm rooms for Intercession. Incredible as it sounds, they seriously expect students to move completely out of their rooms before Christmas break, and then, 5 weeks later, move back in for Spring Semester. Mind you all this would take place in the dead of winter.

The reason for this is, as usual, money. The dorms are financial lemons. The trustees want to rent out the dorm rooms for conferences. Meanwhile, rent for students has been raised to such a level that the closing down of some double rooms is a reality for next semester.

Now here are some questions to ponder: 1) Why is it students are again finding out crucial facts too late? Like the tuition hike, the decision to implement this mid-winter move has probably been finalized and no amount of arguing or demonstrating will reverse it; 2) Isn't there a student representative on the board of trustees? I thought so; why don't we hear from him/her on things that affect us so vitally? Why doesn't the Collegian cover the trustees?

If anyone has some answers to any of this, I'd be really interested to hear. I'll bet the rest of the student body would be too!

Rain begets gagging

To the Editor:

Everybody's always bitching about UMass. As an exchange student from Nevada, I feel obliged to join in the school spirit. I hate this place because it rains all the time. What do you get when it rains all the time? You get DEAD EARTHWORMS. Thats right. After every rainstorm, the sidewalks are covered with literally thousands of slimy little worms, making it impossible to walk anywhere without gagging. I can't wait to go home.

A critic's choice for Monday's Oscars

By ROBERT B. CARGILL
Collegian Staff

The 52nd Annual Academy Awards presentations will be broadcast live by ABC television this Monday, April 14, from the Dorothy Chandler Pavilion in Los Angeles.

"All That Jazz" and "Kramer Vs. Kramer" head the list of feature films with multiple nominations with nine each while "Apocalypse Now" is nominated eight times and "Breaking Away" a surprising five.

All four films were nominated for best picture of the year along with "Norma Rae," which received a total of four nominations.

Up for best leading actor are Dustin Hoffman, Jack Lemmon, Al Pacino, Roy Scheider, and Peter Sellers.

Nominated for best leading actress are Jill Clayburgh, Sally Field, Jane Fonda, Marsha Mason, and Bette Midler.

Melvyn Douglas, Robert Duvall, Frederic Forrest, Justin Henry, and Mickey Rooney are all nominees for best supporting actor and up for best supporting actress are Candice Bergen, Jane Alexander, Barbara Barrie, Mariel Hemingway, and Meryl Streep.

"Breaking Away" looks like a sure upset winner in the best picture category knocking off the heavily favored "Kramer Vs. Kramer." "Breaking Away" is a deceptively-simple film produced on a low budget level that possesses charm, poise, and an exorbitant amount of energy. This is one "sleeper" that is sure to be awakened come awards time.

Dustin Hoffman is heavily favored to cop the best actor prize but this writer tends to favor Peter Sellers for his role as the definitve television addict in "Being There." This is his second nomination in this category.

As for best actress, Hollywood is looking towards two first time nominees, Sally Field and Bette Midler. While all the money is on Sally Field, I'd go with Bette Midler for her exhilarating performance as "The Rose."

Lastly, in the best supporting actor/actress categories, I'd choose Robert Duvall and Mariel Hemingway, the latter up in her rookie nomination.

Perlman at FAC Wednesday

On Wednesday, April 16 at 8 p.m., the renowned Israeli violinist ITZHAK PERLMAN will perform with the Springfield Symphony Orchestra in the Fine Arts Center on the campus of the University of Massachusetts in Amherst. ROBERT GUTTER, Music Director of the Springfield Symphony, will conduct a program consisting of Mozart's Symphony No. 38 ("The Prague"), the Sibelius Violin Concerto, and Hindemith's "Mathis der Mahler."

Itzhak Perlman has been called "the young prince of violinists," and is especially noted for the breadth and maturity of his repertoire, which ranges from music of Bach through the nineteenth century and includes his own transcriptions of Scott Joplin ragtime pieces. He has performed in joint recitals with violinist Pinchas Zukerman, who appeared in the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall earlier this spring.

Robert Gutter has been Music Director and Conductor of the Springfield Symphony Orchestra since 1970, and has played a major role in transforming it into one of the foremost metropolitan orchestras in the Northeast.

Durer's woodcuts on exhibit at Smith

By GARY EYNATIAN
Special to the Collegian

Woodcuts and engravings of Albrecht Durer (1471-1528), featuring prints from his Small Woodcut Passion, will be on view at the Smith College Museum of Art through May 4th. Durer had the talent and humanitarian qualities of such men as Leonardo da Vinci, Raphael and Michelangelo. He was a fine painter and draftsman but his fame comes mostly from his prints.

The woodcuts of Durer hold an important place in the history of the graphic arts, which includes woodprinting and metal plate engraving, as do the works of Durer's predecessor Martin Schongauer (c 1430-91) whose Flight Into Egypt and The Entombment are also on view at Smith. Earlier woodcuts used bold, rich lines to put a simple image on the sheet but with Durer and Schongauer we see thin, expressive lines which create detailed three dimensional images. There is life in every line and the whole sheet is filled as opposed to earlier woodcut prints which left much of the sheet blank. The art of woodprinting was put on equal footing with painting.

Most of Durer's works deal with Christian legends such as the life of Jesus Christ and the Virgin Mary. The Small Woodcut Passion is a pictoral narrative of the life of Jesus which the artist created from 1509 to 1511. Many of the well known events in Christ's life are depicted: The Entry Into Jerusalem, Christ Driving the Moneylenders from the Temple, The Last Supper, Christ Before Pilate, Christ Carrying the Cross, Christ Taking Leave of His Mother and The Resurrection.

The high degree of expression which Durer achieves with a black and white image is magnificent. Light, shade, foreground and background, storms, lightning, sunbeams and fire are all depicted in fine detail. Most of the images at Smith, which were printed in 1612, 100 years after the original blocks were cut, are quite strong.

Also included in the exhibition are a few of Durer's engravings. Among them is one of the artist's best known works, St. Jerome in his Study which was done in 1514. It shows a contemplative religious scholar in the quiet serenity of his study. He seems almost as content as a UMass student preparing for an examination.

The Smith College Museum of Art is open from 11 until 4:30 on Tuesdays through Saturdays, and from 2 until 4:30 on Sundays. There is no charge for admission.

Papillon to perform Sunday in CCA

In the past six months Papillon has appeared as part of the Amherst Summer Concert Series, in the role of technical director. He performed at the opening of an art exhibit at Herter Gallery in September, at the Unitarian Church in Amherst in December, and at the New England Artist Festival and Showcase in 1979 and 1980. Most recently he appeared at the opening of "Whale Month" at Thornes Market in Northampton.

Papillon has been called a "musical futurist, master soundweaver and scientist

Papillon, the electronic music synthesist on extended tour, from Marin County, California, will perform Sunday, April 13 in the Campus Center Auditorium at 8 p.m.

The concert, sponsored by the UMass Arts Council, in conjunction with the Governor's Program Council, is free to the public.

with a hear," being compared to such great European masters of electronic music as Michael Henig, Klaus Schulze and Tim Blake. His music combines complex rhythmic interweavings with pulses to create a modular form of music.

In his concerts, which last from one to three hours, Papillon creates a total environment for his audience, exploring all the possibilities of sense perception in music. Include this conert in your plans for the coming weekend.

Moran asks faculty support on women, minority programs

By KEN ROSS
Collegian Staff

Student Government Association co-President Rich Moran yesterday asked the Faculty Senate to realize the need of University funding for two minority programs and to support a Woman's Studies major.

Moran presented a letter from the Task Force on the Collegiate Committee for the Education of Black Students and the Bilingual Collegiate Program saying that the University has refused to fund the two groups and the SGA has supported them with money from the Student Activites Tax Fund (SATF).

Forcing the SGA to fund these programs is contrary to its trust agreement, the letter said, since the groups are academic programs and not student activites.

Moran, along with Monty Pearson, president of the Graduate Student Senate, voiced their approval of a Women's Studies major and said that a three-day petition in support of the major already has 1,000 signatures. Moran also voiced his support for the current sit-in at UMass Boston.

In other business, Ron Keefe of the Student Center for Educational Research and Advocacy, took the floor to announce that the State legislature has begun to draft the UMass budget, mentioning cuts of 2 percent in personnel and 19.5 percent in academic equipment, including audio visual supplies and lab materials. He also announced that there will be a SCERA workshop for budget information Sunday night at 7:30 in Campus Center room 101.

The Senate also gave special recognition to retiring professor John Mockey and announced nominees for Faculty Senate Secretary. The three nominees are: Micheline Dufau, professor of French, Paul Jennings, professor of Plant and Soil Science, and David Yauky, professor of Sociology.

Amherst Chinese: 'Excellent'

By BRETT MILANO
Collegian Staff

Amherst Chinese Food has almost become a local tradition. Since the restaurant first opened seven and a half years ago, it has become an area favorite. It has also earned a special recommendation from the New York Times, in their recent survey of Pioneer Valley food. As I recently found out over dinner, the excellent reputation of Amherst Chinese Food is well deserved.

Before our meal began, I had a brief talk with the restaurant's manager, Mr. Tso-Cheng Chang. He mentioned that the restaurant is on the verge of expansion, and should begin to enlarge its space within the next month or two. However, he stressed that the restaurant will continue operating in the interim. I then asked about one of the restaurant's most impressive features: its extensive use of freshly-grown vegetables. Mr. Chang's own farm produces over 50 varieties of vegetables, and these are used in all restaurant food when in season.

Our meal began with a rich bowl of Hot and Sour Soup. This is a thick, meatless soup filled with tofu, cabbage, scallions, and many other varieties of Chinese vegetables. As is typical of the restaurant's food, this soup was prepared with just the right amount of spices. It was followed by a platter of dumplings, consisting of meat wripped in a pastry shell. These were served with a soy sauce mixture to dip them in. The dumplings were well-prepared, and are highly recommended.

Our next course was Moo Shi vegetables, a Mandarin specialty. This was my favorite of the dishes we tried. The vegetables include peapods, carrots, and water chestnuts; and are sliced thin and crunchy. The vegetables are put in a thin pastry crepe, rolled up and eaten by hand. Like the soup, this was an excellant vegetarian dish. However, the Moo Shi mixture is also available with pork, beef or chicken.

Next, we tried a serving of shrimp with green peas. The shrimp were large and flavorful, served with mushrooms and onions as well as peas. We were also given brown rice, which added to the richness of the dish. On the side, we had a serving of mung bean sprouts. These were also prepared with exactly the right amount of seasoning.

By this time I was more full than I'd been in ages, but when our host asked if we had room for any more food, the offer was too tempting to resist. He then produced an order of chicken with cashew nuts, another Mandarin dish. This included large slices of chicken, along with red and green peppers. Again, the use of spices was excellent. The customer can choose whether to order a milder or spicier version of the dish, and Mr. Chang noted that most customers prefer the milder version. As for me, the spicier version tasted perfect.

We finished the meal with a cup of tea and that venerable favorite, the fortune cookie. This was simply an excellent dinner, and Amherst Chinese Food is highly recommended. The restaurant is located at 62 Main Street in Amherst, and is closed Wednesdays.

"He was just feeding them rhetoric," Moran said, "the students there were not satisfied with Corrigan's answers and they won't be leaving his office until their demands are met."

Corrigan added he affirmed his commitment to campus governing bodies by "whenever possible enforcing and going ahead with policies recommended by duly constitutional bodies."

The students, who are not answering phone calls, said through a spokesman yesterday, "we'll stay in here as long as we have to, until our demands are met. We will not back down."

Two competitors of the fastest indoor 400 meter race in the world this year will clash in the outdoor one lap: Trevor Garrick of Boston University and Ed Yearwood of the University of New Haven. The sophomore speedster Yearwood is only 38 hundredths of a second off the global indoor 400 m. record.

The women's running events will be highlighted by national class high school stars Maxine Underwood, Adrienne Dixon and by University of Vermont's indoor two-mile standout Judy St. Hilaire.

The high jump will have world class, led by Peter Bouch, who has cleared 7'1", while the hammer throw will include Ed Kania, Ken Jansson and Duncan Helgearty of B.U., all of whom have thrown 200 feet.

One of these challenges became Springfield's second and final goals at 2:43 of the second half. After that, UMass took over, beginning with McHugh's shot over the goalie's head at 2:53. Jean Hackett attacked from both sides of the Springfield net for two more scores within a minute of each other. At 7:41, Cari Nickerson joined in the offensive spree, taking advantage of a good passing series for the Gazelles' tenth.

She scored her third at 13:36 with an overhead lob. Whitney Thayer rolled in goal number 12 a minute later. Nickerson finished off the scoring with three minutes left with a soft bouncer from the right.

"It was a good game," coach Pam Hixon said. "After a week off, we needed to play."

While it was a good game for the varsity, the JVs were not so lucky. They dropped their season opener to Springfield, 6-3. Poor passing and near-constant penalty calls against them hampered the UMass effort, as Springfield posted a 2-0 lead at halftime. The JV Gazelles had tied the score at two when the Chiefs erupted for four goals within the last two minutes of the game.

Mass.Relays set for tomorrow

By KENNETH D. ROLT
Collegian Staff

The Llewellyn Derby Memorial Track will be the destination of many national and world class track and field athletes tomorrow, to compete in the 5th Annual Massachusetts Relays, which begin at 10 a.m.

Although not as big as many more publicized meets as the Penn Relays and the Jenner Classic, the Mass. Relays have produced many national class performances as well as an American record.

Last year Greg Meyer of the Greater Boston Track Club (GBTC), qualified for the nationals in the 3000 meter steeplechase with a winning time of 8:47.5. He later ran 8:31.0, and ranked 5th in the U.S. in the steeple. Andy Bessette qualified for the nationals by a large 16 foot margin, by whirling the hammer to 216'9". He ranked no. 2 in the U.S. Two years ago, an American record was broken at the Derby track: Jan Merrill broke Francie Larrieu's 1973 mark by over 10 seconds, racing the 8 laps in 9:49.6.

In this Olympic year, many athletes will by hoping to qualify for not only the nationals, but more importantly for the Olympic Trials. Although early in the season, meets like the Mass. Relays provide a stepping stone for athletes to reach the trials site, Eugene, Oregon.

Returning in the steeple, is Olympic hopeful Meyer "I hope I'll be able to run as fast as I did last year, 8:48," Meyer said. The 3:59 indoor miler Meyer added, "I had a hard week of training, which will be good for later in the season, but not for this weekend." In his first track outing this year, "..I'm just getting my feet wet."

Running for the Providence Track Club (P.T.C.) will be Irishman John Treacy. In 1978, Treacy was ranked 9th in the world in the 5000 m., had the 18th best 10,000, placed 4th in the European Championship 5000, and ran faster in the 5 kilometer than his countryman Eamonn Coghlan (the current world record holder of the indoor mile.) Treacy also won the

Gorillas 21, Vermont 1

By JONATHAN HAMILTON
Collegian Staff

If you came out to watch the Gorillas in the home opener yesterday at Boyden, you watched an explosive offense score at will and witnessed a tenacious defense which allowed only one goal four minutes into the final period. It was a total team effort as UMass launched a scoring blitz in the first half, coasted in the second and won going away against the University of Vermont, 21-1.

As it turned out, there was no doubt who controlled or dominated in the early going, The Gorillas ran past the Catamounts so thoroughly they out shot them 48-6 in the first half. They led 11-0 after the first period and increased their lead tallying nine more goals to take a 20-0 lead at halftime. At that time, UMass coach Dick Garber cleared his bench and allowed his second and third strings to play out the rest of the game.

The scoring parade the Gorillas displayed was nothing short of spectacular. It was as if Garber turned on a water faucet that the goals came flowing forth. UMass' Chris Corin notched his two goals in the first period to go up 4-0. After Jim Goodhart's high shot that beat Vermont goalie Gary Vreeland, it was Skip Vosburgh's turn as he added three straight goals to up the lead 8-0. Dave Martin then added the first of his four off a great pass from Corin. Vosburgh then made a great backhand shot which fooled Vreeland. Pat Downes added an unassisted goal to round out the scoring 11-0.

The avalanche continued at the start of the second period as the lead continued to balloon. Martin added three more in the second, Vosburgh his fifth at 3:16, Ernie Shapiro at 5:13 and Jim Wheeler with his second and third goals made the lead 18-0. Weeler's goal at 8:24 was a gem— — —after he was well set up by Martin he flicked the ball behind his shoulder, surprising the goaltender. Freshmen Dave McEntee and Paul Fogerty rounded out the scoring in the half. Fogerty's goal just beat the buzzer coming at 14:53

Lest the defense not be mentioned for they too outran outhustled and outsmarted every Vermont threat (the few they did have) that they came up against. Co-Captains Paul Kinnane and Peter Schmitz had strong first halves.

Finally, the new faces impressed the fans such as the physical play of John Schroeder. The three goalies Tom Curran, Chris Benedetto and Dan Altschuler all had strong showings. Tim Cutler also showed his quickness and speed. It was a good opportunity for Garber to see how strong his bench is.

Today the Gorillas travel to New Brunswick, New Jersey to face the Scarlet Knights of Rutgers University. Tomorrow they will be looking for their first win over Rutgers since 1977 when they edged by the Knights 12-11.

Rutgers boasts a strong attack line, three seniors who have been playing together for three years. One of the trio, Tom Sweeney needs four goals to break the school record of 131. The Knights have a 2-2 record with wins over fourth-ranked Maryland and Bucknell.

Rutgers is ranked eighth in the United States Intercollegiate Lacrosse Association Poll and UMass is ranked fourteenth.

Sixto sinks Sox, 9-5

MILWAUKEE (AP) — Sixto Lezcano, who hit a two-run homer in the fourth inning, smashed a bases-loaded homer with two out in the ninth to power the Milwaukee Brewers to a 9-5 season-opening victory over the Boston Red Sox Thursday.

Ben Oglivie, Paul Molitor and Don Money added bases-empty homers for the Brewers.

With the score tied 5-5, Molitor singled leading off the Brewer ninth against Dick Drago, the Red Sox's third pitcher. After a sacrifice, Dick Davis fouled out, Oglivie was intentionally walked and Gorman Thomas walked on a 3-2 pitch.

Lezcano then lined the first pitch into the right-center field bullpen.

Boston took a 1-0 lead in the second inning on singles by Carl Yastrzemski, Tony Perez and Butch Hobson. They made it 3-0 in the third on RBI singles by Jim Rice and Yastrzemski.

The Brewers, held to one hit for 3 2-3 innings by Red Sox starter Dennis Eckersley, tied the score in the fourth. Oglivie homered into the right-center field bullpen, Thomas walked and Lezcano lined the next pitch into the left-center field bleechers.

Gazelles win second

By MAUREEN SULLIVAN
Collegian Staff

Led by senior Jean Hackett's five goals, the UMass women's lacrosse team bombed the Springfield Chiefs, 13-2, at Springfield College yesterday afternoon. The Gazelles are now 2-0.

Occasional spits of rain slickened Springfield's artificial turf, making play very slippery. Both teams had some trouble getting firm footing on the turf, and potential scoring threats slipped away with the stumbling of key players.

Cari Nickerson started the scoring for UMass with a bouncer to the central part of the goal at 4:56. The score remained 1-0 until 14:30 of the half, when Hackett's shot dribbled past the Springfield goalie. The Chiefs' Phoebe Davis took advantage of a roaring breakaway by teammate Jaime Daniels to put themselves on the boards at 19:45.

Margie Anderson made it 3-1 a minute later with a line shot from the goal's left side. Hackett shoveled in her second at 22:57. After Julie McHugh rifled through the Gazelles' fifth at 23:35, Hackett struck again a minute later, to make the halftime score 6-1.

The game progressively turned into a UMass rout, for Springfield was bottled up by the Gazelle midfield; with defenses were almost nonexistent, especially in checking and marking players. UMass goalie Robin Jennings was seriously challenged five times in the whole game.

Women do rate

It is a warm, cloudy afternoon in October. In the south sky a rainbow breeds the promise that rain is not necessarily imminent. Joggers scamper up and down North Pleasant Street.

It is the afternoon of a home football game at Alumni Stadium. Upwards of six thousand persons find their way to the stadium to watch the Minutemen dispose of their latest victim. It's a good afternoon for watching a game. No wind, no sun and no rain. The kind of day when the event itself is larger than the natural phenomena.

On the other end of campus, 22 other athletes are playing a different sport, and the athletes are women. Unlike the football game, the sideline fan can hear much of the communication between players. "Block it up!, block it up!" someone shouts.

There are many fewer fans at the game at the other end of campus. Perhaps 50 persons are there, many relatives of the players, but they are seeing one hell of a game. An early Massachusetts goal holds up the entire second half and the field hockey team downs the University of Connecticut. Oh yea, the football team won too.

Why do people insist on comparing men's and women's sports in term of their respective calibers of play. Like the two games played on opposite ends of the campus that Saturday, men's and women's sports are separate entities and never the twain shall meet.

The debate between men's and women's sports didn't start when Babe Didrikson was driving golf balls in the 1930's. Nor did it end when Ann Meyers was cut from the IndianaPacers at the beginning of last year. The "debate" comes from those writers that insist on comparing the two on talent alone.

Don't look at men's and women's athletics as two boats in the same water, but as separate entities. Women's basketball, for example, is not just a slowed down version of the men's game. It is played differently, coached differently. Julius Erving would take Nancy Lieberman to town in a one-on-one basketball game. Lieberman does not play the men's game. She is a star in the world of women's athletics.

If talent isn't the fair comparison, popularity is. Why six thousand fans would rather watch the football team when it is the women's sports that have put UMass on the national athletic map is their own business. More fans go to see the men's basketball team because of the level at which they play. Meanwhile the women's basketball team is winning seven times as many games in a different level. It really all depends on what you want; sports played at the most ultimate level possible, or a game that is well played and more competitive on a lower scale.

Think of all those people who say they like college basketball better than pro because the college guys try harder.

If women's sports grows into great popularity it will be because of the excitement it creates, and not because their talent is getting closer and closer to men. And when 525 persons come to watch a Women's Basketball League game it will be because the fans enjoy the competition for what it is and not what it could be.

Baseball, softball teams home tomorrow—The varsity baseball game scheduled for yesterday at Fairfield was canceled. The varsity softball game at Eastern Connecticut was postponed. Both teams will be at home tomorrow against New Hampshire at 1 p.m.

Plans set for budget attack

By MARK L. CURELOP
Collegian Staff

State Rep. James Collins D-Amherst, spoke last night to UMass students venturing to the State House this week to lobby against the proposed fiscal 1981 UMass budget.

"The problem is Public Higher Education is divided among themselves," Collins said. "Community colleges will fight state colleges, and all will be wary of UMass," he said.

The students will lobby their representatives as constituents, "not as members of the Student Government Association," according to Ken Mosakowski, Public Policy Director of the Student Center for Educational Research and Advocacy.

State representatives will be voting this week on the House budget. House Ways and Means Committee chaired by Rep. John Finnigan proposed a $15,036,266 decrease of the UMass Trustees $142,116,094 proposal while Governor Edward King's proposed budget is approximately $10 million less than the UMass trustees proposal.

"UMass may not end up with anything better than King's budget," Mosakowski said.

Part of this year's problem stems from the state's reorganization of State Public Higher Education, said Collins and Mosakowski.

"Key is the fact that a large segment of the legislature is outraged at Finnigan's action and might act accordingly," said Ron Keefe, SCERA Public Policy team member. "This could become a test as to whether the governor and the legislature are intent on allowing the REORG Commission to revamp Mass. higher education, or allowing Rep. Finnigan to do it through budget cuts," Keefe said.

The strategy of the SCERA lobbying group is to "hit the House hard this week and play up angles, personalities, and vanguards," said Mosakowski.

In addition UMass Alumni Association mailed 40,000 letters to Alumni asking them to contact their state legislators.

Protestors' arrests end UMB sit-in

By ARNOLD ZEITLIN
Associated Press

BOSTON — Twenty-six demonstrators were arrested yesterday for trespassing at the state university after 50 persons pried open a side door and invaded a locked administration building where a separate group had camped for seven days, the school chancellor said.

"We will not drop the charges," said Chancellor Robert A. Corrigan of the University of Massachusetts's Boston campus, site of the John F. Kennedy Memorial Library, one of the city's major tourist spots. "We consider the case closed."

Corrigan said the demonstrators, to be arraigned Monday, were released on their own recognizance.

"I personally offered to pay their bail," Corrigan said.

The protest started in the corridor outside Corrigan's office last Monday over the failure of two black professors to receive tenure, the firing of a student affairs officer and a demand from students that they be given a 51 percent voice in running the university.

The corridor campers also wanted the heat in the building turned on over the weekend, a move that Corrigan said would have cost $5,000 a day.

Corrigan acted against the advice of faculty assembly members who suggested he drop charges after the arrests and the administration building was cleared of protestors, said Prof. Harold R. Bronk, faculty chairman of the campus governing committee.

Corrigan said he expected no trouble when classes resume Monday morning for 8,000 students.

"We will operate under normal conditions," he said. "It is an open campus."

After a confrontation with campus police, and reinforcements called in from the state police, the city police and the Metropolitan District Commission, said Corrigan, protestors were given the choice of leaving the occupied building or submitting to arrest.

"It would have been awkward for some to be arrested," Corrigan explained, "such as foreign students."

He said 19 of the 30 persons occupying the corridor and seven of the invaders agreed to arrest. The others left the premises, he said.

"Everything was peaceful," he said. "No one was hurt."

Corrigan claimed 50 persons, including non-students, invaded the building by prying open a side door and rushed up the stairs carrying food for the campers. They were met by two campus police.

Angela Davis

Offers Communist ticket to SUB throng

By JACK GALLAGHER

Almost half of the overflow crowd of 1,000 at the Student Union Ballroom Saturday remember Joe McCarthy; you could tell by the expressions on their middle-aged faces.

But the other half of the crowd that came to listen to Angela Davis—students—probably don't remember those times. And they have no reason to.

Saturday afternoon, young and old stood and applauded when Davis ascended to the stage. The applause continued for most of the hour-long speech.

Outside the Student Union Building, a line of people formed, waiting to see Davis on the warm afternoon. No one seemed to mind the $2 donation that was being asked at the door, though. They had come to see Angela Davis, the political activist from San Francisco who is running on the Communist Party-U.S.A. ticket with Gus Hall.

And that's who they saw, who they believed.

Davis said the two-party system is obsolete, that capitalism is obsolete, too. The crowd agreed. She said education should be free for everyone. And the crowd definitely agreed with that.

"The library," Davis said in reference to UMass' crumbling 26-story structure, "is a metaphor for the educational system." No one disagreed.

Davis said she approved of the occupations of Chancellor Henry Koffler's office a week ago and the UMass/Boston administration's buildings, saying she had been in Boston Friday night and talked with students occupying there. (See related story this page).

Telling students they were no smarter than anyone else because they can read big words, the 1965 Brandeis University graduate said: "Students need to respect the working class."

Speaking as CP-U.S.A. vice presidential candidate, Davis condemned President Carter's call for military registration. "There has never been registration," she said, "without a draft. And there has never been a draft without a war...You ought to fight like hell to stop registration." And once again, the crowd responded favorably.

Unlike other candidates for executive office, Davis said, she would make no campaign promises but rather "build mass movements" instead. Davis did advocate, however, to end the eight-hour work day, the slogan for which is: "Six-hour work day and no cut in pay."

Vowing that she will "keep struggling until we have socialism in this country," Davis said: "Capitalism is obsolete...Whether David Rockefeller or the Trilateral Commission likes it, capitalism is on the way out."

The Birmingham, Ala. native said the time has come for a new political party. "A lot of you," she said after asking the audience whether they vote, "don't vote...with good reason. What's the difference between Tweedle Dum and Tweedle Dee?"

Davis also called for making racism a punishable crime and outlawing the Ku Klux Klan; banning all nuclear activity and ratifying the SALT II treaty; and offering free health care to all Americans.

"What kind of Democracy is it when you can't get on the ballot?" Davis asked reporters before her speech. "I don't know whether the Republicans could do it."

Party having trouble getting on ballot

The problems facing the Communist Party-U.S.A. are more than jsut ideological.

Before voters can consider whether they agree with its stance on issues, CP-U.S.A. must get on the ballot. To do that, in Massachusetts, means collecting 40,000 sigantures from registered voters.

But the problem with that, says John Howley, western Massachusetts coordinator for the Hall-Davis campaign, is the validity of the sigantures. Between 60,000-70,000 signatures are really needed, Howley says, because many will be deemed invalid by state balloting officials.

At UMass, however, the reception has been good, Howley says. About 1,000 signatures have been collected here; he says, while throughout the rest, western Massachusetts signatures have been scarce.

The 22 year-old UMass graduate student in economics says CP-U.S.A. is attempting to abtain ballot status in 31 states for the upcoming Presidential elections. In 1976, CP obtained that status in 19 states.

Massachusetts is one of the tougher states in which to receive ballot status for third-party candidates, Howley says.

Group to visit Iran hostages

Militants at the U.S. Embassy in Tehran said a group of visitors, including members of the Red Cross, will check on the condition of the American hostages today, the Iranian news agency said.

Meanwhile, President Carter's efforts to win the support of U.S. allies for America's policy on Iran won some positive response in Europe and Japan.

In a statement carried yesterday by the Pars news agency, the militants said the group to visit the hostages would include representatives of the Red Cross; the Red Lion and Sun Society, Iran's equivalent of the Red Cross; Iranian Health Minister Moussa Zargar and Hojjatoleslam Seyyed Ali Khamenei, the Moslem clergyman who leads weekly Sabbath prayers in Tehran. No other details were immediately available.

The Americans, in their 162nd day of captivity Sunday at the U.S. Embassy in Tehran, were last visited by three American clergymen who led Easter services a week ago and reported the captives were in excellent physical and mental condition.

Army seizes control of Liberia

The rebels who seized power in Liberia beheaded the son of assassinated President William R. Tolbert Jr. and killed two of Tolbert's senior aides, including his son-in-law, Liberian diplomatic sources said yesterday.

The West African nation's new leader, an obscure 28-yearold army master sergeant named Samuel K. Doe, appointed a Cabinet of soldiers and civilians, including the leader of Liberia's banned leftist opposition party.

Doe also quickly set up a sixmember military tribunal to prosecute an unspecified number of senior officials of the Tolbert government on charges of "rampant corruption" and "gross violation of human rights," said the state-run Liberian radio, monitored in London.

The new head of state declared Sunday that "everything is under control" and urged Liberians to go about their normal business, the radio announced.

Congress tries balancing act

WASHINGTON — As Congress returns from its 10-day Easter recess, the lawmakers again face the politically touchy goal of balancing the federal budget for the first time in 12 years.

Confronted with election-year pressures back home, the Senate and House appear headed toward approval of a balanced budget for fiscal 1981, which starts Oct. 1. The toughest question that remains is which programs to cut.

The budget tops the agenda in the Senate when Congress reconvenes Tuesday. The House is expected to take up the budget issue later in the week.

Before the recess, the Senate Budget Committee recommended a $612.9 billion balanced 1981 budget that slashed domestic programs more deeply than President Carter asked while raising defense spending $5.2 billion above Carter's $150.5 billion request.

Walpole inmate hung

WALPOLE, Mass. (AP) — For the second time in less than a week, authorities were called on to investigate an apparent strangulation death at Walpole State Prison.

Norfolk County District Attorney William Delahunt said Steven S. Bennett, 42, of Quincy, was found dead in his cell on block A-1 about 11 a.m. Sunday. He said Bennett's death was "definitely a homicide," apparently a "by strangulation."

Delahunt said authorities couldn't say whether his death was linked to the strangulation last Thursday of inmate James Pierce of Lawrence.

"We haven't established a motive," he said.

He said state police were called in to question inmates after the latest death.

Bennett was recommitted to Walpole last month on a parole violation. He originally was committed in 1976 on a breaking and entering charge, Delahunt said.

Allies support U S

President Carter's call for allied unity on policy toward Iran and Afghanistan gained limited support yesterday. Japan and some European nations recalled their ambassadors from Tehran for consultations and others edged closer to joining America's boycott of the Moscow Olympics.

France and West Germany, in an apparent effort to maintain negotiating flexibility, said the recall of European ambassadors did not signal a step toward severing full diplomatic relations with Tehran — nor a final European decision to join the United States in imposing economic sanctions against Iran. President Carter announced both steps last Monday as a result of the continuing hostage crisis in Iran, and urged allies to join the U.S. move.

French Foreign Ministry officials announced the foreign ministers of the nine European Community nations will meet in Luxembourg April 21 to assess their attempts to secure release of the American hostages who spent their 162nd day of captivity Sunday at the U.S. Embassy in Tehran.

Seeks to link bribes, contracts

Building probe continues

By DAVID HERN
Associated Press

BOSTON — The state corruption commission seeks this week to bolster its contention that — despite the contrary views of ex-Administration Commissioner Anthony P. DeFalco — highly profitable design contracts were linked to payola.

Former Lt.Gov. Donald R. Dwight, who followed DeFalco, was expected to be a witness, but his appearance has been deferred briefly, according to reports.

Dwight is due to be asked how contracts were awarded in the first years of Gov. Francis W. Sargent's term, when Dwight was administration commissioner. One of those contracts was to McKee-Berger-Mansueto, to supervise construction of the harbor campus of the state university.

Two senators were imprisoned for extorting $40,000 from MBM, and the current investigation grew out of that case.

In a telephone interview from Minneapolis, where he is a newspaper publisher, Dwight said negotiations are underway concerning some unspecified information he said his lawyer requested.

DeFalco was Gov. John A. Volpe's chief secretary and then, in 1967 and 1968, his administration commissioner.

Other key officials in the office of administration and finance have been subpoenaed, according to commission sources.

The tie between campaign contributions and design contracts was reported by former Worcester architect Frank R. Masiello. He said that Volpe's moneyman, Albert (Toots) Manzi, doled out design contracts.

Immunized from prosecution for his testimony, which lasted five days, Masiello said commitments were demanded in advance. He said he paid. In the two years of Gov. Endicott Peabody's administration, Sherwood (Woody) Tarlow solicited campaign funds from architects and affected contract awards, Masiello said.

Tarlow admitted his role and was backed up by William A. Waldron, Peabody's administration commissioner. Normally, Waldron told the commission, Tarlow's nominee, if competent, got the job.

He said "simple favoritism" controlled most decisions, and he made "no apology" for that.

DeFalco insisted that was not the way things were done when he was in charge. He said he alone gave out contracts, and he did not consult with Manzi.

UM buses have new home

By DAN HUGHES
Special to the Collegian

The Pioneer Valley Transit Authority buses which service the UMass community have a new home, and the 32,000 square foot facility—completed at a cost of $1.5 million—has a lot to offer.

"It is a thousand percent improvement," said Al Byam, garage operations manager. The new garage offers many improvements over the old facility, especially in the area of maintenance and repair.

The old facility had no space for repairs to be done and service used to be performed in the physical plant garage, which created many problems. The new garage has maintenance facilities large enough to accomodate four vehicles at once and also features an automatic bus washer and an indoor fueler.

One of the most important features of the garage is its size, which can house 30 buses inside. "This indoor housing prolongs the life of the buses and eliminates the problem of having to plug the buses in at night to keep their motors warm enough to start on cold mornings," Byam said.

Another major improvement is the area provided for administrative offices. The larger space provides for a "smoother" operation because of the absence of overcrowding that plagued the old area, Byam said. The larger rooms also provide a place for student drivers to study between shifts and generally increases morale, he added.

the building's only problems are the "usual bugs," Byam said, "and even they will be taken care of soon."

Complaints to be heard

By ANNE MERCIER
Collegian Staff

Students Against Sexual Harassment two weeks ago completed a comprehensive formal grievance procedure designed to deal with cases of sexual harassment at UMass.

Under the procedure, sexual harassment includes any type or pressure for sexual activity with an implied promise or threat about a person's grade, employment, or career.

A grievance board will consist of five students and four faculty or administrative appointments made by the Chancellor. All proceeding will be confidential and complaints will not be investigated without the student's explicit permission, the burden of proof, through "clear and convincing evidence," will rest on the petitioner, the proposal states.

The board would have the power to recommend disciplinary sanctions against guilty parties, including admonition, written warning, public apology, probation, suspension, denial of tenure, and termination.

The grievance procedure was approved last week by the Undergraduate Senate, and on April 29, will be submitted to the Graduate Senate for approval, said SASH member Pamela Malumphy. SASH will also try to get the grievance procedure on the Faculty Senate's agenda before the end of the semester, but will propbably have to wait until the fall for a final vote, Malumphy said.

An imformal survey of University professors from various departments drew some opinion, comment, and suggestion pertaining to SASH activities and the grievance procedure.

Professor Paul Mankin of the French department said that "the issues are well taken, but obviously safeguards must be implemented."

"It is a tricky matter in this large a community where there is a great deal of sexual awareness. We have to work in the direction of openness, but the next step to a practical procedure for grievances is a difficult one," Mankin said.

"The action has to be efficent. A quick confrontation is the best thing, but there are dangers. There could be a great deal of gossip and exagerration on both sides and the problem could fester and foster new problems," he said.

Professor Robert Feldman, who teaches Bio-Psychology at the University said that the grievance procedure is a very good idea, but expressed the same concern for "certain safeguards" to be taken.

"A strict element of fairness must be maintained and there are no black and white answers for resolving some problems," Feldman said.

"Sometimes professors who have led a sheltered existence are puzzled by the provactive nature of some women and may foolishly or clumsily embarrass themselves. Things like this will happen sometimes, but not really mean very much," Feldman continued.

Feldman also expressed concern that if SASH kept secret files of uninvestigated complaints, a bias against accused professors might be created.

"Someone could look in the file and say 'ah hah' if a second complaint against a professor came up," Feldman said.

Art professor Walter Kamys said that, although he had not heard much about SASH, he supported and agreed with their issues. However he hoped "there wouldn't be an element of hysteria involved."

Professor Sarah Grimes of the Journalism department feels that "charges of sexual harassment are extremely serious."

"Like the court system, a woman who has been truly victimized may be doubly victimized by the complaint process," Grimes said.

WFCR reform coming slowly

The demands that arose as a result of the Coalition for Public Improvement in Public Radio's occupation two weeks ago of Chancellor Henry Koffler's office are being worked on.

Problems prompting the 56-hour occupation which ended April 2 began when the Western Massachusetts Broadcasting Council, which oversees the operation of WFCR, a Five College radio station, in conjunction with Station Manager Robert Goldfarb, vowed to cut back the hours of "Que Tal Amigos?" a Spanish-language program.

Dan Melley, council chairman, said yesterday a personnel committee, which would oversee the formation for a grievance procedure for WFCR employees, has been appointed. The grievance procedure is one of the demands that was made by the coalition, and was agreed to by the council.

"We're in the process of putting together an advisory group," Melley said, adding that the council is "trying to pick a date for the next council meeting."

Carlos Valdez, coalition member, said yesterday that the coalition had met among itself last week and that it discussed who would be on the council. One of the coalition's demands was that three minority members be included on the council.

Valdez said the grievance procedure demand came about after Julio Torres, who used to produce "Que Tal" with his wife, Sonia Vivas, resigned—leaving Vivas to produce the program alone. Coalition members feel Vivas should receive an increase in pay because she is doing the work of two people, he said.

Rally to protest inadequacies

By JACKSON KATZ
Collegian Staff

A rally and march to protest Chancellor Henry Koffler's proposals for improving lighting and combatting violence against women and Third World people on campus is planned for noon tomorrow on the campus pond side of the Student Union Building.

The rally, organized primarily by the Women's Issues Team of the Student Center for Educational Research and Advocacy, will begin with a few speakers next to the Student Union, and the ralliers plan a march to the Whitmore Administration Building.

At Whitmore, a list of demands, compiled by SCERA members will be presented to Koffler. The demands include better lighting on campus; later-running buses; trimming shrubbery along campus pathways; mailing maps to every student of lighted areas, patrolled areas and time of patrols, and bus stop stops and schedules; and placement of emergency phones. Also included are demands for various educational measures on campus dealing with the issues of violence against women and Third World people.

The action was called, said Denise Kendall of the Women's Issues Team, because of the unresponsiveness to these issues by the Administration. A similar rally was held last November 15, exactly five months to the day of this one. Yet, Kendall said, the situation hasn't improved since then.

Koffler's proposal, said Jill Tregor a Women's Issues Team member fails to include lighting for 80 percent of the areas targeted as priority areas by a SCERA lighting survey done last January. Koffler's plans include ten miles of lighted corridors on frequently travelled routes on campus, but neglect many of the parking lots on the perimeter of the campus, which were especially noted on the survey as needing increased lighting, she said.

"It is this kind of insensitivity on the part of the Administration to students' demands for basic rights that forces us to go out and rally," said Tildy Turchinetz, another member of the Women's Team.

According to a survey on sexual violence on campus done last year by Everywoman's Center, 87 percent of the women responding reported that they always or at times feared for their physical safety while on campus.

"It's kind of sad that we as students have to spend so much of our time fighting for such basic rights as feeling safe on campus," Kendall said. "But we do."

Over forty-five student organizations and numberous faculty and Heads of Residences have endorsed the demonstration.

Bluewall crowd goes wild to Robin Lane

By NORMA J. COATES
Collegian Staff

Move over Cars! If their show at the Bluwall on Saturday night was any indication, Robin Lane and the chartbusters are about to take over the title of Boston's Best Band.

They won't stop there. This rock and rollin' band has what it takes to be big—very big. To begin with, the Chartbusters are exceptionally talented. Guitarists Leroy Radcliffe and Asa Brebner are veterans of the Nodern Lovers, another legendary Boston band. Their musical rapport on stage and on album is one which could have only grown after years of playing together. Whether trading leads or delicately intertwining melodies, they displayed a highly polished energetic exuberance. Amazingly, they maintained that excellence all night.

Then there's the rhythm section! Scott Baerenwald, who's been with many Boston groups (and the Archies) plays a lyrical bass reminiscent of Paul McCartney (pre-1969) in his marvelous heyday. Drummer Tim Jackson contributes a strong, solid, attention-grabbing beat. He and Baerenwald drive the Chartbusters with an unrelentless, yet fluid attack.

Which bring us to Robin Lane. Her gutsy, passionate voice, entrancing stage presence and phenomenal songwriting ability places her firmly with, if not above, the ranks of other well-known female rockers. Her blonde hair may call to mind Debbie Harry, and her throaty delivery Patti Smith, but Robin Lane has a distinctively personal, unique style. She spent many years as a folksinger-songwriter before forming the Chartbusters as an all-out rock and roll band a year and one-half ago (something she said she'd always wanted to do). Major influences, especially the Byrds and the Stones, are conjured up in her hardrocking but incongruously melodic tunes with lyrics that actually say something. Her songs are incredibly well-sculptured, with some of the best hooks since, well, the Cars.

The first set consisted of original material, mainly songs from their recently reseased album, Robin Lane and the Chartbusters (Warner Bros.). Included in this set was "When Things Go Wrong," currently the number one single in boston and already certified as a "minor classic" by the respected British music journal Melody Maker. They were even more feisty in the second set, throwing in a few timeless classics such as Chuck Berry's Carol and Shakin' All Over, among others. These numbers especially emphasized what a good rock and roll band the Chartbusters are.

The Chartbusters' power and vitality, spurred by Lane's dynamic vocals, kept the sold-out audience dancing and screaming for more when the show was over. They'll get more. Robin Lane and the Chartbusters will ceratainly be a major part of the music scene in the very near future. Let's hope that they'll come back to Amherst very soon!

'Bedazzles' audience

By SARAH SCHULTZ
Special to the Collegian

"Showboat", the world's most beloved musical, played to near-capacity audiences at the UMass Fine Arts Center on Saturday, April 12. Despite the absence of Forrest Tucker and Butterfly McQueen (who were reportedly ill) the performances were well-received by enthusiastic audiences.

In Tucker's absence, the part of Cap'n Andy was played by the versatile Sam Kressen, who fit the role of the jovial, light-hearted captain very well. Birdie M. Hale replaced Butterfly McQueen in the role of Queenie, a part which she has played in seven different productions, and was also very well suited for. The cast featured other fine performers including Tom McKinney as Gaylord, Pamela Kalt as Magnolia, Jean Bruno as Parthy, Dorothy Stanley as Ellie, Bill Nobel as Frank, and Robert Mosley as Joe.

"Showboat" first exploded on Broadway on December 27, 1927, and was an instantaneous success. It has delighted audiences ever since. Several of the show's songs, such as "Make Believe," "Can't Help Lovin' Dat Man," "Why Do I Love You, Bill," and "Ol Man River" quickly became hits with the public and have become American standards.

The story revolves around the lives of the men and women who live and work aboard the "Cotton Blossom", a show boat playing the riverport towns along the shores of the Mississippi in the 1880's. Cap'n Andy, the endearing father figure of this band of performers, manages to hold everyone together despite the many hardships and heartaches associated with such a life.

The main plot centers on a broken love affair. Cap'n Andy's daughter, Magnolia, falls in love with a river boat gambler, Gaylord Ravenal. They marry in spite of her mother's extreme disapproval, and move to Chicago. Their story provides the romantic plot and one follows them through their blossoming love on the showboat, their marriage, and subsequent separation resulting from Gaylord's obsession with a gambling life, and finally to their reconciliation and return to Cap'n Andy's "Cotton Blossom."

Human suffering and the capacity for care and understanding are consistent motifs throughout the musical. There is the mulatto, Julie, who is punished for her color but remains capable of love and understanding even when she is broken and humiliated. There is the comedian, Ellie, who laments that she is never taken seriously. And finally, there is Cap'n Andy; funny, warm, and intensely human, with whom we suffer as he tries to be a father and guardian to all. The entire philosopy of the musical was summed up by Robert Mosley as the wise old Negro Joe, and his emotional rendition of Ol Man River.

The musical not only moved the audience emotionally, but bedazzled them with all the glamour and spectacle of a bygone era. The story spanned 50 years from the 1880's to 1927. It included such nostalgic elements as minstrel music, ragtime, and flappers. The fabulous sets and costumes were especially evocative of a past America.

This particular show was part of an extensive tour of over 88 cities by Gingerbread Productions. It is noted for it's lavish productions and powerful vocals. The show was directed by Bud Widney, with sets and lighting by Michael Hotopp and Paul de Pass. This is Showboat's first national tour in over 30 years, but I am sure it will be well recieved. Showboat is an enduring theatrical classic that should be seen by all.

'Showboat' on road

By DAVID AMBOS
Collegian Staff

They play six nights a week, every week of the tour, rarely playing in the same town two nights running. The night before they came to UMass they performed in a junior high gym in Middleton, N.Y., the only entrance to which was an institutional door too narrow to accomodate the large pieces of "Showboat's" huge set, a recreation of a Mississippi sidewheeler. They tour scores of theaters in the U.S. and Canada during their season, moving at a pace so fast and dizzying that they sometimes can't remember where they played one week previous. Thus Lesley Stewart, co-producer of and chorus member in "Showboat", describes life aboard a "bus and truck" company on a national tour.

Ms. Stewart, along with director Stone Widney and choreographer Judith Haskell, was one of the featured speakers at a three-hour workshop held at the Fine Arts Center this past Saturday. The workshop took place before the matinee performance of "Showboat". Those attending the workshop, a group which included area students, faculty and residents interested in musical theater, were enlightened to the history of the American musical, its current status, and the peculiar problems involved in mounting a road show.

Elevators rock Rahar's

By PAUL WYKES

the Elevators entertained a packed house at Rahar's in Northampton last Friday night with their energetic new wave-ish music.

The band, which consists of Zonder Kennedy on guitar and vocals; John Clark on guitar and vocals; Tom Myers on keyboards and vocals; William Binjamin on drums and vocals; and Jerry Ellis on bass, played three sets of original material, opening with "Stop the World," one of the catchiest songs off their new album. The dance floor was soon packed as the Elevators kept the pace going. Almost all of their new album was performed, along with several new songs. Among the songs that stood out were "Girlfriend's Girlfriend," "Johnny," "Friends," and "Sleep." The latter is a new song that features Tom Myers' keyboards. The first set was repeated as the third set, with many of the songs sounding better the second time around.

All of the Elevators' songs were written by either Myers, Kennedy, or Clark. Each of the writers has a different style which adds variety to their sound. The group managed to blend the different styles together very well—a difficult task considering the wide range of sounds. All of their songs are strong rhythmically, which make them easy to dance to, as evidenced by the crowded dance floor.

The band's new album entitled Frontline, was released on Arista records late last week. Earl Mankey, who has worked with 20/20 and The Pop, did the production. Although no single has been chosen yet, there are several potential commercial hits on the record. The group is taking a "wait and see' attitude before deciding on future plans. A possible tour with an established act could materialize within the coming months. However, for now, the Elevators will continue playing locally, giving consistently enjoyable performances.

Editorial/Opinion

American machismo

The headlines jump out at us every day. There is no letup, no relief from the imminence of war. "Carter tells Soviets Persian Gulf taboo" one Boston Globe banner headline reads. Other headlines hint at the growing "war hysteria" over Iran and Afghanistan. "Higher arms budget backed, poll says" and "Carter seeks list of 19 and 20 year olds" other Globe headlines read. High government officials intimate that certain steps taken by the Russians will result in war with the United States. A noted expert on Russian affairs says, "We're closer to the last world war than I care to think about." The sense of complacency that set in with the end of the draft in 1972 has been disrupted. It has become obvious that once again the youth of America must decide if they are willing to die for their country.

BRUCE WARD

Some will go willingly, others, including myself, will refuse to go.

The timing, some say, is perfect. Those most likely to be drafted are too young to remember the ravages, the horror of Vietnam. They will go and fight and die for America. For hot dogs, apple pie, and baseball games they will die and be maimed. They're not going for ITT, Exxon, or US Steel.

"I think morally I would have to go," one 18 year-old Harvard co-ed tells the Globe. "How far can we let the Soviet Union go...if I were asked to go to combat I would," she adds.

A recent Harris poll shows a sudden increase in support for defense spending. Another poll claims that two out of every five Americans believe a war involving the US will occur in the next five years. Would you go? has become one of the most commonly asked questions on America's college campuses.

The resistance to the draft and the Vietnam war is looked at somewhat askance by many of today's potential inductees. "Hell no, we won't go" sentiments are being replaced with "The ayatollah is an assaholah" T-shirts. The Boston Phoenix calls this reaction to the Iranian situation a "patriotic frenzy." The thought of the US being pushed around by some country many had never heard of is abhorrent to the new jingoists. We're not going to war to kill people, they maintain, we're going to preserve our freedom, to prevent the Russians from taking over the Persian Gulf.

The sentiment toward war, toward "fighting for our freedom" appears endemic. More are willing to go and less are opposing. There is now a reason to die, they maintain, to preserve our freedom, the American way of life. First Afghanistan, then Pakistan, then...the domino theory of the eighties. The argument that the Soviets are attempting the world's oil supply is naive, but nevertheless earnestly voiced.

Well then, will I go? Given the present circumstances I see no reason to go. Those arguments centering on the image of America having her glorious face rubbed in the dirt by some third-rate religious fanatic and of a gun-shy weakling afraid to exert force for fear of "another Vietnam" are hard to accept. Hard to accept when we consider the devastation and exploitation of the underdeveloped countries we were fighting to "save." Surely we are not viewed as the benefactor of the Third World nations when we are systematically bombing their civilizations "back to the stone age."

There must be some way of convincing them of our beneficence. Massive infusions of agricultural and medical technology would certainly be more appreciated than napalm, defoliants, and germ warfare. Increased funding for the Peace Corps, additional support of the Red Cross, air-lifting of essential foods, and intense nutritional education of impoverished nations would boost the image of the "fallen hero" much quicker than the inhumane devastation of cultures, environments, and human beings.

No, I feel no desire to defend my country's machismo. I will not go to war for my country in order to "die like a man." There have been too many wars, too many have died for the sake of international arm-wrestling. I will not go to Afghanistan or anywhere else merely to become another statistic in some overzealous general's "game plan." In the words of Senator Edward Kennedy, "the young should not have to register for the draft so the old can prove their toughness...We must not spill blood in the Persian Gulf in order to top off gas tanks here at home." Amen.

Out of darkness

To the Editor:

This is an appeal to the women and men of the UMass community. You must think once again about your own personal safety on this campus and share your concern for the safety of others. We all know the fear and anxiety of walking alone on this dimly lit campus. Each of us has had to wonder whether or not we will arrive home safely. It is easy to deny that the incidents of rape have increased 50 percent on this campus; that violence against Third World women and men has increased; that antisemitic acts have multiplied, because these problems have consistently gone unreported and undiscussed by those who have the responsibility to inform and educate.

The administration has tried in every possible way to keep from informing the public of the severity of the problem of violence on this campus. Why is it that the administration wants to cover-up information that should be made public? It is because they are ultimately responsible for the safety of every student at this University. This is a responsibility that has not been met.

The power is in the hands of Chancellor Koffler. He must make the decision to change this situation, yet he has refused to address the problem adequately. Students have tried to work with the administration to improve lighting on campus. For over two years students have worked on surveys, reports, attended meetings, and outlined specific suggestions for improved lighting. Our recommendations have been ignored; BUT STUDENTS CAN NOT IGNORE THE REALITY OF AN UNSAFE CAMPUS. We who live and work here know there is a need for improved lighting as one important step towards creating a safer community. We know the situation, we know what must be done, and once again we will join together in protest. Tomorrow we will rally together in support of better lighting and OUR VOICES WILL BE HEARD!!!

D.C. work hazard

To the Editor:

I am a student worker at the Franklin Dining Commons serving the Orchard Hill/Central Area. Recently I was working in the main kitchen area when another student worker cut his index finger on a sharp object. It was bleeding profusely, obviously needing some first aid attention.

I asked if there was a first aid kit nearby and I received my answer, "No, but the infirmary is up the street." I then went upstairs to the serving area to request a first aid box. Well, they found one; unfortunately it was empty.

Finally somebody produced several small "Band Aids" from their pocket. Luckily for the student, the bleeding stopped and a "Band Aid" was all that was needed.

My concern now is the fact that students should have to work in a place that presents hazards (knives, ovens, etc.) without any type of first aid on hand.

It is in my opinion that Mr. Blanchard, manager of the Franklin Dining Commons take a good long look at his safety conditions in the D.C. We as student workers and regular employees should not have to be exposed to this.

Rooming rumor revised

To the Editor:

I read with interest Liz Clarkowski's letter in Friday's Collegian protesting a requirement that students must move all their belongings out of the residence halls at the end of the fall semester. I don't blame her for being mad—I'd be mad, too, if this were true. I'm not mad because it isn't true.

The Board of Trustees did pass some changes in the Residence Hall Contract recently. One of these changes requires students to move their personal belongings from the floor and put them on the beds or desks. All personal belongings can stay in the rooms over intersession.

This requirement will make it possible, for the first time, for dorm rooms to be properly cleaned over intersesson. Students moving into a new room for the spring semester will not have to put up with someone else's dirt, and everyone will benefit from a clean floor at the beginning of the semester. For most people, moving personal property from the floor should be pretty easy.

In response to Ms. Clarkowski's stated and implied questions, a few points should be made:

1. The new policy was requested by the Residential Committee, a group of students and staff created at the request of the Student Government Association to recommend changes in the residence halls.

2. The student members of the Residential Committee are elected in the residential areas, and students make up a majority of the Committee.

It is unfortunate that the UMass rumor mill has struck once again, and gotten people all worked up over something that isn't nearly as bad as it sounds. The new policy should make the dorms a better place to live for everyone. The new policy (as well as other important information about living in the residence halls) is detailed in the Residence Hall Contract which is currently being distributed around campus. It deserves a careful reading.

Member, Residential Committee

It's alive!

Dear Greg,

I understand you attacked my recent appointment as trustee to UMass in the March 12, 1980 Collegian. Fine. That is anyone's prerogative in whatever system you think we live under. So let's progress from there. you do not know me, we have never met, talked or even corresponded.

I was personally surprised that you chose me as "a target." Why? I would like to understand where you are coming from. Certainly, you should try to understand were I am coming from, in spite of your personal "opinions."

My secretary will call you to invite you to Marlboro to see how we live. I hope you will be open and responsive.

You will hear from us soon.

Very truly yours,

The booing Bradley section

To the Editor:

In reference to Dave Bradley's column of 4/10 "Women Don't Rate:" Mr. Bradley has breathed new life into the drained cliche "dumb jock." Bradley's rather insidious candor concerning the history of sexual inequality does not provide him with an excuse to insult the quality of the performance of women athletes.

Mr. Bradley, women basketball players are not to be pitied or considered inferior to male athletes simply because attendance at their games is less than overwhelming. Pity might well be reserved for the UMass men's basketball team whose ignominious season record is well known. As had been noted by numerous articles in the Collegian sports pages, the real action this season was in UMass women's basketball despite the fact that this team was not a) male, b) professional, or c) your "popular" combination of a and b. Your pronouncement that "someday both sexes will be able to compete at the same level of ability" implies that your own puerilism is infectious. I certainly hope not.

Candyce A. Carlon

To the Editor:

For a writer who claims to "rarely deal in absolutes", Dave Bradley managed to produce an article of absolute irresponsibility. His assessment of the condition of women's sports is but a reflection of his own biased opinion. He equates power, speed, and aggressiveness with skill and talent, but fails to show us why this startling revelation must be so. Also, he fails to give us directions to this wonderful YMCA he frequents, where even the pick-up basketball games outshine the best WBL has to offer. Perhaps he's afraid that the team from Old Dominion will respond to his challenge?

Conforming identity

To the Editor:

Four years ago I entered the University without a purpose. I sought only to know, to explore, to stimulate a mind that seemed near extinction. In a phrase, I had no major. After three art courses, one history course and five economics courses, I began to realize that my lack of purpose was getting my grade point average down. I began to question whether it was the rhetoric I rejected, or my lack of ability. First I thought it was me but then I realized that its the degree of conformity which guarantees success. Cop an identity and you'll do just fine. But it goes deeper than that.

In the pursuit of identity, people have found identities magnified to absurdity. Whole departments, in their attempt to find identity, have created significance. And in that significance there is less truth than meets the grade point average. Is it truth or identity we seek?

Caren Powers

Mmmmm...yum yummy

To the Editor:

I would like to report an incident that happened to me and two friends on Wednesday, March 26 concerning Whole Wheat Pizza. Never before have I been angered and antagonized by a business to the point of writing a letter to a newspaper.

For the past two years I have been a faithful customer to Whole Wheat Pizza—Wednesday night changed that completely. When my friends and I ordered a pizza from this "factory," we innocently forgot to say, "Hold the flies." It was bad enough to wait half an hour for it to arrive only to have my roommate shriek in horror as she was about to bite into a slice of pepperoni a la fly, but the treatment I received when I called to complain was worse.

Immediately, I called and asked to speak to someone in charge. I very calmly explained that I had just been delivered a pizza and that there was a fly baked in the middle of it. The woman adamantly refused to accept fault. Now, speaking realistically, WHY would I put a fly on my own pizza?

After arguing with this woman for ten minutes, she put a man on the phone, supposedly the manager. He was no better. he did not believe me either. I finally convinced him (after 15 minutes of arguing) to send a delivery person out to look at my pizza.

When the guy arrived (about 45 minutes later) he said, "Wow, you're right." Of course I was right. Who would lie about a fly? And did Whole Wheat call and apologize? Of course not. I find this to be a very poor example of customer-relations.

The moral of this story is: When you remind them to bring the free cokes, don't forget to say, "Hold the flies!"

Laura Weissman

UMass Relays: a day to remember

Top competitors highlight Relays

By KENNETH D. ROLT
Collegian Staff

"Quality" best describes the performances by the track and field athletes in Saturday's 5th Annual Massachusetts Relays.

The field events were highlighted by an awesome long jump showing by Ron Chambers. The Jamaican native representing the Northeastern University Track Club, crushed the track and meet records with a 25'1" leap. He improved his own records in the finals, by jumping 25'1.5".

The 16 lb. hammer throw was deep, with the top 5 throwers all throwing over 190 feet. Boston University's Declan Hegarty bested the group with a throw of 200 feet. Placing fourth was Ed Kania, the current world leader in the indoor 35 lb. weight throw (72'8".)

Bill Hartley had a close attempt at a national qualifying 17'2" in the pole vault. The University of Rhode Island star dominated the field and won by over 2 feet, in 16'7.5".

On the track, John Treacy nipped greater Boston Track Club's Bill Okerman in the Invitational 1500 meter run, 3:46.9 to 3:47.2. The victor from the Providence College Track Club ran equal to a 4:04 mile. Minuteman Steve MacDougall ran equal to his best ever, placing 4th in the race with 3:51.0.

Greg Meyer of the G.B.T.C. debuted his 1980 outdoor track season with his 8:48 steeplechase win. "I was interested in my form over the hurdles," said the 5th-ranked U.S. steeplechaser. "I've only worked on hurdling form once." Meyer was the defending steeplechase champion of the relays.

Providence College's duo of Dan Dillon and Ray Treacy went one-two in the Invitational 5000 meter run. Dillon of Chicopee won the race in 14:15.5 with the Eire native Treacy in 14:22.9.

B.U.'s Trevor Garrick bested former high school rival Steve Keyes from the University of Connecticut in the 400 meter dash. Garrick timed the one lap in 47.4 seconds. The freshman grass burner also anchored the Terriers winning mile relay team with an unofficial 47.0 split.

Massachusetts had three individual winners: John Wright in the 110-meter high hurdles, Rick Walls in the 1500, and Chris Omeltchenko in the seeded 5000.

Impressive show for UMass track

The Minutemen had perhaps their best showing ever in the Massachusetts Relays this weekend, with individual best performances in nearly every event.

The seeded 1500 was blistering: senior Rick Walls winning in 3:49.5, Paul Beaulieu second in 3:50.9, both bettering Steve MacDougall's 3:51.0 standard set in the New Englands last year. Taking third was Rick Doiron, breaking his own freshman 1500 record by over 5 seconds, with 3:54.5.

Later in the meet, the former Umass. 1500 record bearer MacDougall ran in the Invitational 1500 and placed 4th in 3:51.0

John Wright had an ironman day running 4 races. Wright took his heat and won the final in the 110 meter high hurdles, running a personal best 14.8 seconds. He combined with teammates Johm Rasku, Paul King, and Greg Mader to win the 440 meter high hurdles shuttle relay, marking the 3rd consecutive year that UMass. has won the event. The power striding Dorchester native led off the Minutemen's winning 880 yard relay team. Wright, Bill DeVarney, Rick Cady and Rick Trunfio each ran 220 yards, and totaled 1:30.8 for the victory.

Chris Omeltchenko won the seeded 5 kilometer in his best 12 lap effort, 14:50., and senior steeplechaser Paul Kirksey placed 9th overall with a personal record 9:50.5.

Senior tri-captain Mickey Baugh ran the best 800 of his collegiate career, speeding the two laps in a third place 1:53.6 effort.

In the women's events the Minutewomen placed fifth overall in front of more than 20 teams from greater New England. The highlight of the meet for the UMass women came in the mile which was won by top-seeded sophomore Judy McCrone in 5:05.6 despite a strong head wind.

"I told Judy to use the other runners as a wind break for the first two laps, after that she just took it out. Cyndi Martin also ran very well when you consider that she had run a very fast half-mile earlier in the two-mile relay," coach Arnie

Morse said. Martin finished third in the mile with a 5:11.

The team of Karolyn Shea, Robyn Dally, Judy McCrone and Cyndi Martin the two-mile relay in 9:31. UMass also managed to take first in the mile-relay with the team of Shea, Dally, Sally Anderson and Diana Sealy who finished in 4:11. "We looked really good in both the mile and two-mile relays. Both teams combined to run some excellent times for so early in the season," coach Morse said.

Senior Diana Sealy proved to be UMass' top all around performer, placing well in several events. Sealy placed fourth in the finals of the 220-yard-dash in 26.8, but UMass' Jackie Budrow and Angie Caouette failed to qualify for the finals. Sealy ran a season best of 59.0 in the 440-yard-run, but did not place in the finals of that event.

In the half-mile senior Sue Mulligan ran her season best of 2:25 against a strong head wind and Sally Anderson ran her best half in 2:26.2. Both failed to place in the final standings against some of the best distance runners in the Northeast. In the 400 meter low hurdles Donna Beaudreau; 1:12.7, Donna Quinn: 1:14, Anne Connelly; 1:18, and Liz Gonzalez; 1:17 ran some of their best times but could not place in the final standings.

UMass sophomore Micki Callahan placed fifth in the finals of the 110 meter high hurdles in 16.3 in a race in which she was seeded as eighth after the trials. Julie Horgan ran 17:8 in the trials but did not make the finals.

UMass ran well in the sprint medley when the team of Sue Fallon, 220 yards, Angie Caouette, 110 yards, Micki Callahan, 110 yards and Edna Hanson who ran the 440 yard leg clocked a 1:57.8. UMass' 440 yard relay and the field event people failed to place in the final standings. Sue Fallon threw 31'9" in the shot, Diane Boczanowski, Ilene Prochazka and Karen McNamara threw the discus, and Karen Snow, Eileen Everett, Sandy Flethcher threw the javelin. Angie Caouette, 16'3", Jackie budrow, 15'10", and Micki Callahan, 15'15", competed in the long jump.

Linksters lose

By BOB MITCHELL
Collegian Staff

The UMass men's golf team lost to Providence College by an 11-stroke margin, 407-396, Thursday at Wannamiosett C.C, in East Providence in the opening match of the spring season. Amherst College tied the Minutemen at 407.

Bill Reardon, Bill Wilcox, and Jay Doherty each finished six over par at 78 to lead the Friars to victory. Minutemen captain Mark Duggan fired a 77 round to capture the individual title and lead the UMass contingent.

Senior Bob Robichaud figured highly in the UMass efort, shooting a fine 78. Bob Gladchuck finished with a round of 81, Marty Hunt 83, and Steve Midttun 88. Transfer student Tony Kelley had a tough round, skyrocketing to an 89. Rich Murphy rounded out the Minutemen scoring with a bulky 91.

Mike Blase and Jim McIntosh each shot a 79 to head the Lord Jeff's effort. Joe Tamsey, playing as an alternate for the UMass linksters, finished ten over at 82.

The Wannamoisett course, which is the site of both the North East Amateur and Hornblower Tournaments, was in surprisingly good shape. It is a tremendously long course with several par four holes over 400 yards.

"I was a little disappointed," said UMass Coach Ed Vlach after the match. "but they (Providence and Amherst) both had previous matches and practice rounds over the winter."

The Minutemen now turn their attention to tuesday's match at Hickory Ridge C.C. in South Amherst, in which they will play host to Darmouth and Amherst. "I'm happy we have a few tri-matches before we get to the larger tournaments," Vlach said.

Spikers stop MIT

By MAUREEN SULLIVAN
Collegian Staff

The UMass men's volleyball team rolled over the Massachusetts Institute of Technology 17-15, 15-4, 15-13 at NOPE gym yesterday. Boston University forfeited its matches due to injuries.

Despite the score, UMass dominated MIT in nearly every aspect of the game, especially in middle blocking, serving, and passing. MIT had moments of good digging and frontcourt action, but it was more in the way of UMass errors than MIT spikes that kept the match so deceivingly close.

"When you're playing a team of a lower caliber, it's harder to play 'up' to them," UMass coach Al Morel said.

Neil Gluck, Pat Ryan, and Quique Caballero played well overall, especially Gluck, who served several aces to run away with game two.

UMass, in winning yesterday's match, was rebounding from a loss at the hands of Springfield College last Friday night 3-15, 15-12, 14-16, 10-15. The match was played before over 200 people at NOPE gym.

"It was an excellent match," Morel said. "Games two and three were among the best we've played."

The UMass junior varsity also fell to Springfield 15-6, 4-15, 11-15. In that match, the Chiefs overpowered UMass' blocking with spiking and a consistent defense. In the third game, UMass hung on at 11-12, but penalties cost them the match.

Gorillas squeeze by Rutgers, 15-14

By DONNA SULLIVAN
Collegian Staff

NEW BRUNSWICK, N.J. – The last three mintes told the story of a see-saw battle that saw the UMass lacrosse team tie the score, take the lead, then score what proved to be the winning goal in its 15-14 win over eighth nationally ranked Rutgers University here in Rutgers Stadium.

With three minutes left in the final quarter, attackman Jim Weller tied the score at 13-13 off a pass from co-captain Peter Schmitz. UMass' Mike Lewis raked in the go-ahead goal less than a minute later and at 13:17 Weller made a day of it scoring what would be the winning goal unassisted. In the final seconds Rutgers' Bob Olsen tossed one in but one was not enough after Weller's insurance goal.

"Had our shots in the first period been on goal we would have won by five or six goals," UMass head coach Dick Garber said. "The win showed that this team has a lot of character. We got behind and still hung tough. I thought we played a really good game."

Rutgers held the lead throughout the first quarter after starting the scoring off at 3:69. James Ford, one of Rutgers' leaders in points, assisted Jow Sciacca in putting Rutgers on the board. Less than a minute later Dave Martin tied the score off a pass from Ski- Vosburg.

Mark Tyree of Rutgers, who last year tallied four goals against the Gorillas, managed two in the first period, both unassisted. The UMass defensive midfield of Doug Brown, Steve Martino, and John Connors shut down Tyree for the rest of the game and put a stop to his scoring.

"UMass did a good job of bottling up our offense down near the net," Rutgers head coach Tom Hayes said.

UMass took its first lead midway through the second half when Paul Kinnane ran the ball downfiels and tossed it to Dave Martin who assisted Weller on his first of three goals.

Rutgers countered with two consecutive goals to regain the lead. Seconds before halftime, freshman Tim Cutler tied the score once again at 6-6.

Chris Corin got one of his four goals 5:57 in the third period to give UMass the lead once again, 9-8. After a Rutgers counter attack tied the score a minute later, Corin assisted Pat Downes on his second goal of the afternoon to regain the lead at 8:21.

The Gorillas fell behind by two, early in the fourth quarter but again they quickly tied the score. Corin got control of a ground ball that had eluded many, tossed it to Schmitz who gave it to Tom Walters who put it in at 2:43 in the final period.

Schmitz climaxed a superb day when at 3:50 he got control of the ball, ran it downfield dodging numerous defenders, and slammed it into the net unassisted for yet another tie, 12-12.

UMass goalie Dan Altschuler had quite an afternoon: 12 saves eight of them in the second half. Altschuler, a freshman, "played so well in a tough game like this," assistant coach Jim Calder said.

Today the gorillas travel to Boston to face the Eagles of Boston College. With a 3-3 record, BC is currently ranked sixth in New England. The laxmen took the win in last year's UMass-BC battle, 18-5. "They are a good team, we are going to have to play hard but I think we will beat them," Garber said.

Peters leads women to Wildcat twin killing

UMass' Sue Peters pitched a no-hitter in Saturday's 6-0 home opener en route to the Minutewomen's double header sweep from the University of New Hampshire. UMass won the second game, 11-7.

Peters had a tough act to follow. When she fired a one-hitter in an earlier assignment against the University of Lowell. As for blanking the Wildcats, Peters said, "It felt great. Thats all I can say. Great."

The senior hurler provided all the offense she would need in the third inning with a three-run home run sanowiched between left and center field. Scoring were Jen Parker, who had singled, and Karen LaVerdiere, who had walked.

The only time UNH threatened to spoil Peters' shutout was also in the third frame. With two outs Mary Ellen Smith reached on an error, Patty Bohmer walked, and both advanced on a pass ball, before Ann Huidekoper popped out.

LeVerdiere's triple plated pinch runner Ellen Korelitz, Mary Ann Lombardi, and Parker in the sixth to complete the UMass scoring.

In the second game, pitcher Kath O'Connell relinquished 2 runs in the first inning. However, in the third frame, the Minutewomen exploded for six hits, including Jackie Gaw's tape measure solo homer. Gaw's shot literally would have reached Mark' Meadow if not for striking a tree first.

After Gaw's fan club, which showed its support with a "Go Gaw" poster, calmed down, Peters and Brenda Simmons hit back-to-back singles. Co-captain Fran Cornacchioli and first baseman Fran Troy doubled, contributing three RBI's. Gaw stepped to the plate for the second time that inning and smashed a double for two runs, increasing UMass' Lead to 7-2.

Mittmen sweep UNH; McEvilly keys wins

By MIKE ESTRADA
Collegian Staff

Mike McEvilly's two-run home run in the bottom of the seventh inning capped a quick comeback for the Minutemen in the second game Saturday, as they swept a double-header from the University of New Hampshire, 2-0 and 6-5.

With the New England Coaches Poll due to come out today, UMass (7-5) is one of the favorites to be on top. Saturday's sweep was the second straight for the Minutemen this season as they ran their winning streak to four games.

The first game also marked the second strong winning performance for UMass pitcher Mark Brown. Brown struck out seven wildcats on his way to scattering six hits and strandihg eight men on base for his second shutout in a row. His record is now 2-3.

The offensive standout for UMass was designated hitter Jim Aulenback. The burly junior from Maynard went four for five at the plate over the course of the two games with two runs batted in. McEvilly followed with three hits (including the homer) and three runs scored.

In the second game, UMass pitcher Chuck Thompson was nearly the sad sack of the day. With UMass leading 4-3 coach Dick Bergquist went to the bullpen for the righthander when starter Chris Collins, who had allowed three runs and five through four innings, found himself with the bases loaded with one out in the fifth. Thompson struck out UNH's Chris Collins and forced Jeff Stohrer to pop up to catcher Dave Oleksak.

In the sixth, Thompson had problems. After fanning wildcat, Matt Kelly, he walked Tom Conner (Coach Ted Conner's son) on four pitches. Ving Choiniere grounded to third, moving Conner to second. With two men out, Paul Lecompte reached on a fielding error by UMass third baseman Barry Bennett, the second Minuteman error of the game. Conner moved to third. Two pitches later, Lecompte stole second putting runners at second and third.

Thompson then became the seeming unfortunate pitcher of record when Steve Johnson, who had a pinch-hit single in the fifth, chopped a blooper into center field to score both Conner and Lecompte to put UNH up 5-4.

"I would have felt better if they hit it over the fence," Bergquist said later. As the Minutemen entered their half of the seventh, the day and Thompson's perfect 3-0 record looked to be tainted.

Doug Alyward received his second walk of the day to start off the seventh. Mark Litano sacrificed Alyward to second with a bunt. McEvilly came up.

UNH pitcher Tom O'Shea had stymied McEvilly all day. He pitched him to the outside until he tried to sneak a fastball by the captain. McEvilly climbed all over the three and one pitch to drive it over the 375-foot mark in left center field.

In the first game, Aulenback double scored McEvilly (single) in the first inning to give the Minutemen a lead they didn't relinquish. They scored their second run in the sixth when McEvilly singled, stole second; moved to third on a ground ball by Warren McReddie; and scored on a sacrifice fly ball to right bv Oleksak.

Bruins alive; C's win

HOUSTON – Nate Archibald and Larry Bird fueled a third quarter spurt as the Boston Celtics pulled away from the Houston Rockets and went on to post a 100-81 win in an Eastern Conference semifinal game yesterday. Boston leads the best-of-seven series three games to none.

Houston center Moses Malone led all scorers with 28 points and teammate Bobby Joe Reid had 23.

Archibald led Boston with 20 points, Cedric Maxwell added 19, Bird had 18 and Rick Robey scored 14 points coming off the bench for an injured Dave Cowens in the second half. Cowens hurt his back. The extent of the injury is not known.

Meanwhile in Pittsburgh, the Bruins skated to a 8-3 win over the Pittsburgh Penguins to even their first round best of five series Stanley Cup playoff series at two games each. The decisive game will be played in Boston.

Racism at Every Women's Center

By Suman Bohm

A number of the white staff at the Center pay tremendous lip service to being against racial oppression. They enjoy saying, "We go to demonstrations against racism. We are not racist. We are good people." They like to tell you what they know about black history and other countries like my own India.

The Center does its best to give the public a good racial image of itself. In its outreach publicity it takes pride in pointing out - and trying to take credit for - the Third World Advocate position and the anti-racist work that's done through that position. The Center also like to talk about how one of the things that has grown out of the Third World Advocate position is a Third World Women's Task Force which is very active in organizing around political issues concerning Third World people. In so praising the Task Force, the Center is trying to give the community the idea that it is totally committed to fighting racism.

What the Center doesn't mention is that this very Task Force that it talks so highly about, for publicity purposes, has recently charged the Center with institutional racism. But when this happened, the Center's staff all of the a sudden didn't think so highly of the Task Force anymore. What most of the staff did was typical of people who like to think of themselves as progressive and liberal but who in fact end up furthering institutional racism - they developed racist fantasies that allowed them to think that the niggers were wrong and they were right. In other words, these people only enjoy being against racism when it gives them the chance to attack other whites and in so doing convince themselves that they're hot stuff. But if you ask them to face their own racism, they freak out, cry, say that they niggers aren't being reasonable.

But things at the Center are now coming to a head. The other day a Third World woman resigned because she couldn't deal anymore, she said, with racism "South African Style." This isn't all however. Jamila Gastoni and I have been asked by the Third World Women's Task Force, to which we belong, to stop attending Center staff meetings because of the overt racism expressed by a majority of the white staff. What this means is that all three Third World member of the Every Women's Center's staff have been seriously alienated by the racist behavior of certain whites at the Center. In other words the Center is at the moment on the verge of total isolation and racist self-destruction.

One of the things that caused this was a racist incident that grew out of planning for International Women's Week. It is important to point out that a number of weeks before the incident (which happened at the Center) Jamila Gaston, a sister who works with me, had told me that she expected some kind of attack to be launched against us soon by certain white staff members. She said she could feel it coming. She had specific reason for thinking this was going to happen. She said that some of the white staff were angry at us because of our political directness, but because they were liberals and couldn't admit their racial hostility they were holding their anger in and letting it build up while waiting for a good opportunity to give us heavy criticism that would apparently "have nothing to do with race." They would try, Jamila suggested, to hide their racism behind a mask of white professionalism.

As it turned out, Jamila was right.

What follows is a description of what happened at Every Women's Center and some of the institutional ways racism operates to target people of color. It also shows the particular kind of racial pettiness that characterizes white managerial types who are looking for Third World people to psychologically lynch. The following description is divided into three parts - (1) background, (2) racial attack at Every Women's Center, and (3) summary of subsequent events.

(1) Background

At a certain point during the planning for International Women's Week, some confusion over the Palestinian)Israel question came to a head over a workshop that was to be given on "taking progressive positions in the mideast." The difference of opinion over the workshop concerned the fact that a Jewish person was going to be giving the workshop and the response of some local Palesti-

Angela Davis speaks at occupation at UMass Boston

At 11:00 PM Friday night amidst a crowd of reporters and television people Angela Davis arrived at the University of Massachussetts, Boston campus. Her visit to the campus came as a complete suprise to the demonstrators. However, once they realized her presence they showd their delight by greating her with chants of "we love Angela". The crowd which numbered close to 150 people at that time were supporters of the students who are presently occupying the Chancellors office. (the occupation began last Monday). The enthusiasim of the supporters, was exubriated by the very fact that a well known activist in the struggle for human rights had taken time from her schedule to give support to their cause.

This cause consists of returning UMass Boston to working people and minorities. The reason why they were forced to take this action is because the Chancellor and the Administration had failed to address the following demands to the satisfaction of the student body.

-Tenure for black faculty members, Marcia Lloyd and Jefferson Cleveland

Reinstatement of student advocate, Heinz Bondy's contract

End Proficiency Exam

Increased Minority and "non-traditional" enrollment and programs

a. Development of Bilingual-Bicultural Programs

b. Reorganization and Restructuring of ESL Programs according to student needs End sexual harrassment

No guns for police in building during the day; student, faculty police review board

Increased financial aid

Repeal of 43 percent tuition increase; instate tuition rates for foreign and out-of-state tuition and no further tuition increases

-no further budget cuts

-Increased childcare facilities

-Student Union Center

-Binding student referendum regarding Free Period

-No military recruitment on campus

-Binding student vote of confidence on current administration

Angela Davis soon made it known that the struggle at UMass Boston was not an isolated incident but one that coincides with the struggle for rights all over the country. In a brief rap about unity, Angela Davis said "Propogandist have been telling the public that there is no struggle". She spoke about how you don't see signs of a movement on TV nor in the Newspapers. But, the struggle does exist all over the nation and it has not died in the 70's. Angela Davis was able to recall the days when she was a black student and she was defending her own rights to be "educated, not miseducated". She spoke on how " they are out to destroy the chance for the working class and minorities to get an education". Thsi brought a sigh of acknowldgement ; as many of the students (who commute form within the city of Boston) identified with the statement. Ms. Davis emphisized the fact that what was happening at UMass Boston is evidence of the feelings of students from one end of the nation to the other. Angela Davis did not want the students to get discouraged because she felt that the people of this country have the right to defend their rights to decent lives and education. Angela Davis concluded her talk by assuring the students that she would help the cause of the occupation by spreading the word about what is happening at UMass to other parts of the nation. ●

Craemen Gethers - lest we forget

By Dave Green
Office of Third World Affairs

Craemen Gether, a Third year Math student of UMass, is now serving 8-12 years in prison. On August 7, 1974, at approximately 11:30 to 12:00, three men robbed MacDonald's in Hadley, on route 9. Craemen Gethers and Earl Brown were arrested for this crime. The description of the robbers given by MacDonald's workers were: one Black male wearing sunglassses and a headband and another Black male wearing sunglasses and a brown turtleneck, and the third undescribed. The amount taken was $1100.00.

On August 25, 1974, Craemen Gethers was arrested for robbery. On this night, two women who worked in MasDonald's the night of the robbery, also the state's eyewitness; were riding in a car and spotted Craemen on crutches entering a Kentucky Fried Chicken Restaurant. They called state troopers, said they believe Craemen is the man they saw in the back of the store; wearing a head band, the night of the robbery. Two state police walked into the restaurant and arrested Gethers. Informing him that he was a suspect in a MacDonald's robbery. Gethers was not allowed an attorney at first, and was not informed why he was chosen as a suspect.

Craemen's first attorney, Robert Santinello was not good (lack of a better word) for the case. Santinello: (1) failed to get any witnesses who had been in the dorm where Gethers was working the night of the robbery, (2) he told Gethers to plead guilty. (even though Gethers persisted that he was innocent and Gethers' evidence looked favorable) (3) Gethers fired Santinello and asked for his money back. Santinello never returned the money and picked Gethers second attorney. Gethers has gone through attorneys. His latest is Matthew Fineman (as of 11-2-77).

Gethers' evidence is like the following: He has a witness that testified under oath that he and Craemen were playing cards at a UMass dormitory during the alledged hold-up. Craemen's girlfriend also testified the same fact. Craemen was disabled and on crutches at the time with medical receipts from his doctors to prove this fact. It was not physically possible for him to participate in the robbery. In reference to that evidence one of the state witnesses claimed; Craemen jumped over the counter during the robbery. The District Attorney says Gethers had hurt his foot intentionally. Craemen was tried and convicted by an all white jury, in Northampton, MA, so that might clear up why he was convicted. Some more testimony Gethers feels was not this is your world

By Curtis Haynes Jr.

This is the last and final section of a three part series which has given a history of the relations between Western and Third World countries.

The trilateral commission was formed by certain capitalist in North America, Europe, and Japan. The members of this commission feel that some group of nations will have to take the responsibility for insuring that the international system functions effectively. Recently, because the United States has lost its economic domination over the "free" world there is no longer a polar force for capitalistic countries to base their system, and for the developed nations to support. Thus, a group of nations would best be able to play their role of "being the pole of cooperation". The trilateral commission feels this role will be best played by the United States, Japan and Europe because they are the nations with the three largest national economies in thecapitalist world. Their joint action is believed to be necessary for the effective stabilization of the world economy,for further openingof markets to the manufactured products of developing nations, or for the establishment of commodity aggreements. These members argue that the trilateral system will be the best system to produce a more coherent approach of cooperation among the countries, and it will be able to produce better management of important global problems in some areas.

Their strategy is that our current world should go beyond merely coping with future events, but rather shaping these events. Another aspect that is agreed on is that it is necessary to keep the market system. Trilaterial people believe that the under-developed countries will gain from the development of the larger countries because their production will go up as does that of the major countries. Besides, they believe in free enterprise: any country can make it if they put their minds to it.

However, this is not the reality we live in. Today, if a country does not start at the top it will be very difficult for them to achieve any type of advancement. The new economic system envisioned by the trilaterial commission will be a system driven by profit. As in the past, the consideration of the welfare of other countries will come in second to the motive of these profits. Capitalist also spread the belief that moderinization or economic development is the best way for the developing countries to go. But is it?

Until recently the world, as a whole was not in need of coherent managment, but the human species is now, in danger of becoming extinct. The threats to the world society are the results of a mismanaged environment caused by a defective set of political institutions. Our natural resources are being diminished by technology. In our governments today the indicators of relative power are increasingly related to the level of technology, and the size of the GNP and the scope and extent of indirect political influence. The large states have grown so bureaucratic and impersonal that they are losing touch with the very people whom they govern. Also, war is the preoccupation of many soveriegn states. The United States and the Soviet Union are the two mightest nations in the world, as a result of their nuclear and military might. As a result, the entire world has become vulnarable to the particular interests, orientations, and misperceptions that guide the governing elites in Moscow and Washington.

Currently nations are (internally) not even able to conceive the interests of the world as a whole. For example, the American society is based on the narrow mindedness which emphasises on winning and down grades losing, nor is there room for inbetweens of right and wrong. Also, the people of the Western worlds generally give a priority to profitability and contend that disaster is an unavoidable cost of industrial progress. The modern industrial state can usually only conceive of the future in technological terms. Also, as money is associated with power, and power arises from successful applications of the most modern technology, the characteristic of industrial leaders of our time tend to be technocratic in outlook.

The structure of our current societies are not adequate to deal with the problems the world is facing on a global scale. Things have got to change, and the worlds people have got to consider themselves as humans, rather than members of a nation, with a particular race, creed, or color. People have got to be educated to look at the world with a global approach, to have a new global conscienceness.

However, the past has proven that only war, natural catastrophe, or economic depression can loosen political systems sufficiently to bring a new scale of priorities for governments. It has been often supposed that basic changes in world order will become realistic only after the end of World War III, which will come about, if the growing thirst for justice, in the world, is not quenched. Still, this untimely end could be put off, if enough conferming evidence could be shown to the world, which showes, that we are in a grave danger of extinction. In conclusion, redesigning of the world order is to search for modes of human existance that assure the survival and welfare of mankind and other forms of natural life. There has got to be a redirection of progress, if man is to survive on this planet. ●

ANGELA DAVIS AT THE S.U.B.

Angela Davis, black political activist and Vice-presidential candidate for theCommunist Party USA, spoke at the Student Union Ballroom on the campus of the University of Massachussetts Amherst Saturday afternoon. Ms. Davis articulated the "real issues" of all working people, particularly those of the nationally oppressed

Angela Davis, along with presidential candidate Gus Hall, represents the communist party-USA, a working class organization thatis actively struggling againstpolitical, social and economic inequality among all people,especially those who are oppressed under the present capitalistsystem. Sister Angela Davis rose to the podium in front of a large, enthusiastic crowd, who anxiously awaited her political organization's program. Adressing the real issues, Ms Davis began by attacking the Carter administration'sproposals on budget cutbacks and tuition cost increases(designed superficially to limit minority enrollmentin public universities).She also commented on recent campus militant activity, saying,"the progressive changes that occured out of the sixtie's Afro-American liberation movement have ceased." Ms. Davis, however, no longer limits herself to being a strictly "black"revolutionary.She urged the audience to organize and fight against the economic repression based upon the exploitation of all workers. "monopoly capitalism is on its way out,"she stated. Carter's solution to our economic crisis, according to Ms.Davis, is to increase the military budget to 150 billion dollars and to slash all social services. Carter's alternative for minority unemployment is basically a job in the U.S. Army,the working class being sent to defend our "corporate interests" abroad. Ms. Davis envisions our youth fighting against the draft, and other crisises, instead of eachother, and the importance of recognizing the common oppressor,the Capitalist system.She sees the need as most important that restrictions upon higher education be eliminated. "one shouldn't have to pay in order to receive a complete education" she said.

she then went on to talk about the relationship of the class struggle to society and the repression it faces in the 80's. Her political program is designed to give the people an alternative to the traditional two-party ballot. Because of ballot restrictions in certain states,it has been virtually impossible for Angela Davis to have her name upon ballots in all states. Speaking strongly for the support of a new independent voice that many people want to hear, she sees her campaign as part of a rising tide of independent actions taken by voters who are discouraged by the two-party system. Overall, Angela Davis stressed racial unity and recognition of the working class, saying,"as students,it is important to understand that you are no better than working people."Ms. Davis' alternative system also stresses the need for a ban on nuclear weapons, a return to detante, a cut of the military budget, the closing of nuclear plants, and an outlawing of racial and sexual inequality, and all forms of repression. In presenting an alternative system, she and her running mate anticipate an end to the present capitalist system and a new and more Democratic system under Socialism ●

On Friday night the Reporting Staff of Nummo News visited the occupation of the Chancellor's Office at the University of Massachussetts Boston. Upon our arrival we were greeted by over 150 demonstrators, whohave continued a5 day vigil in support of giving working people and minorities a stronger representation in the politics of the university. unfortunately, of the 150 demonstrators present, only a handful of them were Third World students. Within the building itself, the representation was even less. considering the importance of the demands (which are listed in the article "Angela Davis speaks at UMass Boston"), the incommensurable representation of third world students was puzzling. Was this a reflection of a deeply rooted apathy and complacency or lack of direction that exists within third world communities? Throughout the United States? Nationally, brothers and sisters are too frustrated to even look for employment. One's paycheck doesn't even buy what it used to. Prisons are overflowing with people of color. And in the midst of all of these problems we still try to impress eachother with money we don't have.

The situation of Third World people in this country is grave, and it is about time we realized this. We should show that we are proud and that we are strong enough to stand up for our rights for a decent standard of living and education. thus, in the light of the present situation, NUMMO News encourages all Third World students to enter political organizations, attend classes and lectures, events which are geared to raise consciousness and reaction to the changes which are affecting their lives. Finally, NUMMO News is dedicated to the education of people about the Third World; if anyone in the community feels that they have something to offer toward this goal of solidarity, please show up to our staff meetings which are held every Thursday at 7:30 P.M., or leave your article at the NUMMO News office in NewAfrica House. ●

Police Brutality - Where Will It End

Where will it all end. Many people are unaware of the seriousness of this issue. But Anthony Lycurgus knows that lesson all to well.

Anthony Lycurgus a college student in Boston will be arraigned April 25 in District Court on charges of resisting arrest. On January 18, 1980 Anthony was arrested by Officer William Broderick. Lycurgus is currently being charged with 4 counts of assault and battery of a policeman, 1 count of being a disorderly person, and 1 count of attempting to rescue a prisoner.

Officer William Broderick and Officer Thomas Kineavy have earned quite a name for themselves in the Third World Community. The reputation these men have earned is one of police brutality.

Broderick and Kineavy both officers of District 4 have had countless complaints of police brutality lodged against them from Third World residences.

On September 22, 1979 Anthony Lycurgus and Tony VanDerMeer witnessed the beating of a blackman by police officers Broderick and Kineavy. When Lycurgus asked the officers for their names and badge numbers. There were told to, "fuck off." The two young men along with ten other concerned citizens followed the officers to the stations to file a formal complaint. Upon their arrival at the station the lodgers of the complaint had to wait an hour and a half before the complaint was processed. When the parties asked for a copy of their compliant the request was denied.

On December 13, 1979 twenty-one year old Bellanna Borde a black Northeastern University student filed charges of police brutality against Officer Thomas Kineavy. In an interview conducted by Black Weekly Bellanna spoke of the incident. "I went through a lot when I went to the complaint room, the man was reluctant to file a complaint when he saw two black people. He said "Who did this?" and I said "Officer Kineavy." Then he said "Why the hell are you telling me this. I don't want to hear this." I had to wait and wait for the complaint to be filed. The sergeant gave us a hard time. When he finally wrote it up he didn't write out what I told him. He only wrote out a complaint for assault and battery with a dangerous weapon, chemical mace. That was not the only complaint I told him about. I had been brutalized and not only with mace. The whole incident must be taken into account.

Bellanna Borde a women weighing 110 pounds filed her complaint after she was arrested and physically harmed while waiting for a bus at the corner of Huntington and Mass Ave. The police later reported that no such complaint was ever filed and, that the file must have been lost if it had.

On January 18 1980 Reginald Butler witnessed his brother being beatened by Officer Broderick. When it came time for the young man to be arraigned the Judge who was prepared for the usual court hearing in cases such as Butler's was convinced by the D.A. that the case warranted a full trial. The transcript of the trial were never shown to the public.

On April 25, Anthony Lycurgus is going to need your support he can't get it from the Judge, nor the jury but he can get it from you. He's counting on 'us' and we can't effort to let him down!!!!!

Support Anthony Lycurgus ●

From Que tal Amigos to Boston Campus, the strategy is:

STRENGTH THROUGH UNITY

The victory in the struggle with Que tal Amigos against the Western Mass. Broadcasting Council and the inept general manager Robert Goldfarb of WFCR radio station, has proven once more that unity is strength. The Coalition for Public Involvement in Public Radio, leader of the battle, has found that such triunph was due, primarily to the strong militancy and unity among many progressive groups, organizations and individuals. They showed that deep grass root commitment of political involvement exist in the community of the Pioner Valley and specially with many students, professors and staff members of UMass. Their support is deeply appreciated.

"The wide range of people who came together reflected the community's capability of struggling against the same energy. This was not the first nor last time that people will come together for a common cause. Let's step up and continue our efforts towards unity."...

• • Mauricio, Hampshire College Student.

"It was a significant victory. The broad-based participation was very positively reflected in the wide range of people who participated. But we must utilize the gains that were won. Gains speed up the possibility of further change. But if we are not consistent these gains will not be materialized to the full extent possible."...

• Marea, UMass Staff Person

"It's a step in the right direction. We have a lot of force when we unite and fight together. There are so many struggles going on against institutionalized racism. We need to fight on all fronts."...

• Suman, Amherst Resident.

"What makes me feel most good is how people got together around an issue. People not originally in the struggle made it their own. It was a unified effort and was done well, with great teamwork. People worked together beautifully.

It was a victory because people showed their strength in unity. It's too bad that compromises had to be made and Goldfarb wasn't fired."...

• Julie, UMass Student

"It was an important gain made for the Hispanic communities of this region and for the Hispanic and progressive communities of UMass. Hispanic gained the right of cultural expression."...

• Manuel, UMass Student.

"It was a victory, but since it was a limited victory, we have to remain alert or it will be a fragile victory. Often we tend to lower our defenses when we win something. We should see what happened as a step towards something bigger."...

• Marta, Northampton Resident.

"A sense of community was built during the occupation. People grew a lot from the political discussions and from working together. It was a step forward, but the struggle continues. This was one aspect of racism and class oppression. As a white person, I feel that white people have to play a principled role in challenging racism if any progressive or revolutionary change is to take place in the U.S."...

• Pete, UMass Student.

The occupation of the Boston campus Chancellor's office one week after the occupation here in Whitmore by the Coalition, has also recieved an all-out support from this campus and the 5-College area. This community understands their struggle loud and clear, their list of demands for 51 percent government control, tenure for black faculty menbers, increase minority and non-traditional programs, as well as the rest of the demands, ought to be met. They speak up the same issues of racism and sexism as we do here, their struggle is our struggle. And it is our duty to show support to our cousins occupying the Chancellor's office at UMass Boston.

Angela Davis' visit to the militant students in Boston and her speach here in Amherst, has lifted the morale of many students who are struggling with the Administration and the Government. Angela said that the struggle didn't died in the 70's, because a stronger unity among militant people is shaping up in the 80's.

The following organizations and offices from the Five College Area played a role in the Que Tal Amigos struggle.

The list, however, is not complete but it gives you an idea of how broad the participation was in the occupation.

La Nueva Cancion Latinoamericana

A mediados de la década del sesenta, se destaca un despertar en la juventud, tanto puertorriquena como latinoamericana en general. Este despertar fue en base a los temas políticos del momento. La guerra de Vietnam, la lucha contra el militarismo norteamericano, el servicio militar obligatorio, las ideas crecientes del socialismo y la lucha por la liberación de los paises oprimidos, creo una inmensa busqueda del trabajo musical en nuevas formas de expresion en crecimiento con las nuevas formas sociales de sentimiento nacional.

La Nueva Canción Latinoamericana nace dentro de esta vivencia humar n la misma década y reacciona con un profundo sentido artistico y de solaridad; Mercedes S a, Daniel ety, Victor Jara, Quilapayun, Inti-Illima alpa Yupanki, Violeta Parra, y muchos tros que vale aqui nombrar, representan increible e este movimiento cultural. Apoya al pueblo salvadoreno

En Boston el sabado pasado hubo una manifestacion en apoyo a la lucha de liberacion nacional del pueblo de El Salvador y en contra de la intervencion norteamericana en ese pais. La manifestacion tuvo lugar en el Boston Common. Lo que sigue es un comunicado de la coalicion que organizo la manifestacion.

Hace unas semanas, esta nueva Junta Civil-Militar de asesinos, en accion desesperada por la presion revolucionaria del pueblo, decreto una reforma agraria limitada y la intervencion de los bancos. Estas reformas fueron acompanadas de un estado de sitio para intensificar la matanza de lideres y miembros de los partidos politicos populares y asi decabezar la revolucion.

En octubre pasado, la lucha del pueblo salvadoreno derribo la vieja dictadura militar de 50 anos. Fue reemplazada por una Junta Civil-Militar supuestamente progresista, pero que no es sino una nueva mascarada de la clase dominante salvadorena y el gobierno del gobierno de los Estados Unidos para impedir que el pueblo salvadoreno establezca su propio gobierno.

La nueva Junta ha continuado la represion y la matanza contra campesinos, obreros, estudiantes y mujeres. Mueren 15 personas asesinadas como promedio diario.

El pueblo ha respondido intensificando la lucha: centenares de sindicatos, escuelas y universidades, organizaciones comunitarias, los campesinos de las haciendas y poblados, todos los partidos politicos revolucionarios y progresistas unificados tras la Coordinadora Revolucionaria de Masas, se ha plegado a la lucha, a la huelga, a la agitacion callejera, a los preparativos armados para el combate contra sus opresores.

Estas ultimas semanas son decisivas en la lucha por la liberacion de ese pueblo hermano. Mientras tanto, la CIA y el gobierno norteamericano han intensificado su intervencion en apoyo a la Junta asesina y estan hablando de otorgarles una asistencia economica de 50 millones de dolares y una asistencia militar de 5.7 millones.

Entre los muchos crimenes de diaria ocurrencia para aterrorizar al pueblo, han asesinado al Arzobispo Oscar A. Romero, lider de la Iglesia Catoiica, nombrado Nobel de la Paz, por oponerse a las masacres contra el pueblo y a la internvencion norteamericana en El Salvador.

Se puede enviar ayuda economica a las organizaciones populares que luchan en El Salvador, por medio del Comite Centroamericano, P.O. Box 8971, Boston, MA 02114.

Advocates for Bilingual Education

Dear Friends,

After much discussion throughout the last year, a number of parents, teachers, and other community people decided to form a Union of Advocates for Bilingual Education. The decision to form the Union was made after listening to parents express their needs and their desire to ensure quality education for their children.

This Union will be totally independent of any local, state, and federal agencies. It is being formed by parents, teachers and others interested in working with them from cities and towns throughout the state. Parents from various linguistic groups will be the people who control and direct the Union.

You are invited to attend the first meeting of the Union of Advocates in Bilingual Education in which the Union's objectives and activities will be established. We are asking that each local PAC as well as other community groups which have been directly involved in issues of bilingual education send from one to three representatives to this first meeting. The representatives may be members of the PAC, parents who are not member of the PAC, teachers, high school students, or other community people. The meeting will be held in Worcester at Primera Parada, 19A Street of Saturday, April 26, 1980 from 10am to 1pm. To ensure maximum participation, please be prompt as this is a working session.

We hope that this will be a productive first step in developing a state wide mechanism to deal with the many problems we have been facing in bilingual education. In order to further this effort, we have included a tentative agenda for the first meeting.

Sincerely,

Roberto Lasanta

Que Tal Amigos coalition supports UM Boston occupiers

We, the Coalition for Public Involvement in Public Radio, declare our solidarity with occupiers of the Chancellor's office of UMass-Boston.

The coalition is composed of students, faculty, college staff and community members in the Five College Area, and is primarily based in UMass-Amherst. Third World and progressive organizations in the are joined together this year in the coalition as a direct response to racist cutbacks in Hispanic programming at public radio station WFCR-FM. The station is housed on the UMass-Amherst campus, and as a Five College station, it receives the largest share of its funds from UMass-Amherst. In order to defend the Hispanic program Que Tal Amigos from the cutbacks, after having tried several other channels, we organized the occupation of the Chancellor's office at UMass-Amherst. This was done in an effort to urge the University administration to take a position on the racism and injustice at WFCR.

Aside from our having engaged in a very similar action to the one organized by the students at UMass-Boston, we feel a common bond with the occupiers' current struggle, because of the material link between our two actions. They are both parts of larger struggles by people to have more control over social institutions which affect their lives daily and to make them more responsive to people's needs.

The coalition supports the current occupation's demands and identifies with its long-run objectives as well, which include an expansion of democracy, an end to racism, and an end to sexism. We are making this public statement in an effort to establish some unity between forces for social change.

IN GUATEMALA INDIANS FIGHT REPRESSION

"Let all rise up, let all be called, let there not be one or two groups among us that stays behind the rest!"

The above battle cry is from the ancient sacred book of the Maya-Quiches. This February it echoed throughout Izimche, the Mayan capital destroyed when the Spanish invaded Guatemala, as more than 22 Indian ethnic groups discussed plans to counter the Guatemalan government's repression of both Indian and non-Indian poor.

The historic meeting at Iximche particularly discussed reaction to the massacre of 21 Quiche Indians and seven supporters when they were burned to death by the government during the January occupation of the Spanish Embassy in Guatemala City. The meeting was also an indication of the growing Indian militancy in a country where native peoples make up more than half the population.

The Guatemalan government has reacted to this militancy with continued repression. At the same time, Indian and non-Indian poor have developed a growing unity as seen in the farmworkers strike in February which practically paralyzed export production.

At the Iximche meeting, the Indian representatives noted that from the first mass killings of the Quiches at the Tonola River in 1524 to the recent embassy massacre, the native peoples have always been a special target of repression. "Why so many massacres against the Indian people?" they asked. "The answer is clear: the voracity and greed of the criminal invader, continues in his rich descendants."

The Indian leaders, however, clearly differentiated between rich and poor ladinos (non-Indians).

"To do away with all these ills of the rich descendants of the invaders, we have to fight together with workers, peasants, students, shanty-town dwellers and other popular and democratic sectors, and strengthen the unity between Indians and ladinos, since the solidarity of the popular movement with the Indian struggle was sealed with the lives of the victims at the Spanish Embassy," they noted. "The sacrifice of those lives brings us closer than ever to a new society, to the Indian dawn."

Most important, the declaration of Iximche spells out the goals of the Guatemalan Indians' fight: "a society of equality and respect; for the right of our Indian people as such to develop their culture broken by the Spanish invaders; for a just economic system where no one exploits others; for communal ownership of lands like our forefathers had; for an end to discrimination; for an end to all repression, torture, kidnapings, assassinations and massacres; for an end to forced conscription into the Army; for an equal right to work; for an end to being used as objects of tourism; for the just distribution and use of our wealth as in the times when the life and culture of our forefathers flourished." Finally, the document calls on the Indian peoples and democratic peoples and governments of the world to support the struggles of Guatemala's Indian and non-Indian poor.

The Guatemalan government has reacted to the growing organization and combativity of the Indians with continued massacres. Since the Spanish Embassy holocaust, nine people have been killed in Nebaj and six in Rabinal in clashes with the Army. In Nebaj, Quiche province, soldiers opened fire on a crowd of peasants who had been called into town to receive their draft cards. When no one appeared to give out the cards, the peasants protested and the Army began shooting. Later, Army officers claimed the peasants had been trying to capture the town's military garrison.

In Rabinal, Achi Indian peasants have been protesting efforts of the National Electricity Institute to steal their lands in order to build a hydroelectric dam. The peasants have organized themselves as part of the Committee for Peasant Unity, CUC, and have vowed to resist eviction attempts. On March 6, six peasants were killed and four wounded in a confrontation with Army troops, which Army headquarters claimed was an "ambush" on the part of the townspeople.

The growing unity between Indians and ladinos was most evident in the national farmworkers strike during the last two weeks of February. Led by the CUC, more than 60,000 permanent and migrant farmworkers struck for a wage of $5 per ton of cane or 100-pound sack of cotton harvested in a day.

The strike was supported by all Guatemala's unions and affected 60 farms, sugar mills and coffee and cotton processing plants. For the first time, Indian migrant laborers who live on tiny farms in the highlands joined together with mostly ladino agricultural workers to win the strike. A leader of the CUC was wounded and several farmworkers killed in confrontations with the police, the largest at a mass metting in Santa Lucia Cotzumaguapa.

The strike threatened to spread to the capital city, where the National Committe for Trade-Union Unity, CNUS, demanded a $7 a day minimum wage. Alarmed by the unexpected degree of combativity shown by the farmworkers, the government tried to calm things down by declaring a minimum wage of $3.20 a day on the export farms. However, the CUC has called on the farmworkers to wage a farm-by-farm fight to win the full $5 daily, arguing that $3.20 is insufficient to meet a family's needs, and to guarantee that the landowners actually pay the legal minimum wage.

"We have won this minimum wage with our organized and militant struggle, but it is not enough, so we will fight on," it declared.

Chinese displaying a new TV and Western-style clothes: The message from the regime is 'work hard, and this too can be yours'

"What is baseball? What is a Christmas tree? And do cowboys really herd cattle on horseback?" were common questions among the 52,000 Chinese who visited an American photographic exhibition that closed in Peking on Saturday.

The exhibition, "Glimpses of America," gave many Chinese their first visual impression of the United States, the nation which has aroused more curiosity here than any other. The photographs, in Peking for 14 days, will travel to other parts of China.

J.W. Canty of New York City assembled the exhibition's 160 large color photos of the contemporary United States from works donated by 18 New York-based photographers. Visitors paid three cents apiece to enter the exhibition, housed in an ornate hall built by the Russian government near the Peking Zoo.

The pictures were taken in 28 of the 50 states and portrayed various aspects of America, from the coal mines of Appalachia to the skyscrapers of New York.

Canty, a photographer in his 30s, worked with Colin Room of Australia to raise money for the exhibition from companies and individuals.

Many of the Chinese were confused by American hairstyles. Some though a photo of Canty's father was of a woman and other that a high school boy was a girl.

Other persistent questions concerned American treatment of blacks and Indians.

"Can blacks go to school in the United States? Do they lead happy lives? Are Indian reservations prisons? Are Indians allowed to drive automobiles?" ●

American Businesses in Taiwan

Before the United States began full ties with the People's Republic of China on January 1, 1979, Chinese officials issued warnings to American corporations that they would have to cease direct business ties with Taiwan if they wanted to do business with the PRC. Of the more than 300 U.S. companies doing business with Taiwan, Pan American World Airways and First National Bank of Chicago were the only major American companies to end relations with Taiwan. But many other American companies set up subsidiaries with separate staff in Peking.

Now this has changed. In major policy changes China and Taiwan are encouraging American companies to do business in both places according to American leaders based in Taipei and Hong Kong as reported by James P. Sterba in the New York Times.

According to Robert P. Parker, president of the American Chamber of Commerce in Taiwan both sides privately encouraged and approve of the trade. Because there hasn't been an official statement from Peking, the State Department and some American companies are cautious.

China's belief is that since it officially recognizes Taiwan as a province China must encourage the same kinds of foreign investment in Taiwan as it encourages in Mainland provinces. Chinese official have said that Taiwan can remain independent with its own economic and social systems, its own army and president if it gives up its name, the Republic of China.

The leaders on Taiwan are encouraging American companies to trade with the mainland as a way of comparing both areas. Taiwan officials believe their efficiency, incentives and quality will prevail.

For American companies the reasoning for dealing with both sides is Taiwan remains one of the safest markets in Asia while China offers huge potential. ● no shutting the open door

From Newsweek

By Melinda Lui

A dozen carefree Chinese shimmied to a scratchy record at a party in the working-class Yongan Road district of Peking. The dance floor was cramped and a bare light bulb hardly added to the ambience. Yet as the tempo of the music quickened, couples launched into a familiar step they call the 'Yao Bai-a hip-swiveling exercise the government considers counter-revolutionary. "The Chinese are not supposed to do disco in public," said one man who was trying-without much success-to grow Western-style sideburns. "But behind closed doors, it is our favorite dance."

Foreign Labels: Disco may seem decadent to the country's conservative ideologues, but other staples of Western life seem to be entirely acceptable. There are 3 million TV sets in the country. Western advertising is no longer an oddity, and shops are beginning to stock an assortment of popular consumer items- wristwatches from Switzerland, color-television sets from Japan and radios and sunglasses from Hong Knog. (Status-conscious owners of the glasses often leave the foreign labels stuck on their lenses.) Most consumers cannot afford to buy the new merchandise. But the government's message is clear: work hard, help China achieve its economic goals and this too can be yours.

Entertainment is becoming a powerful influence. Love stories, crime thrillers and sitcoms have replaced the dreary, doctrinaire productions shown for years in local movie houses. In what passes for permissiveness, the hero in one film smokes king-size Western cigarettes and even says "damn it" and "I love you" on screen. For the moment, the government does not seem concerned about the embrace of capitalist-style culture. "We must educate the people by supplying programs of all kinds," said Chen Hairen of the Central Television Station in Peking. "During the 'Gang of Four' period only three films, eight songs and eight model revolutionary operas were permitted. We were forced to repeat them over and over until nobody wanted to watch them."

At least one newspaper has enlisted to fight in the bore war. The revived Peking Evening News, shut down during the Cultural Revolution, is back with a breezy human-interest section called "Talk of the Town." Organized religion has been born again. Attendance at Peking's two Christian churches increases every Sunday and graying monks at the reopened Buddhist temple eagerly accepted 100 new members recently. The capital's only Muslim mosque is mobbed on Fridays. Many citizens seem to be exploring less orthodox religious pursuits as well. Witches, sorcerers and fortunetellers are reappearing- sometimes with unhappy results. According to news reports, a witch outside Shanghai strangled a sick patient while trying to excorcise a "water-monkey spirit."

Despite the changes, many Chinese question whether the new freedoms will endure. They are wary of the government's official backtracking on liberalization and still remain far from convinced that the future will live up to its advance publicity.

Caustic Satire: The masses believe they do more than their fair share of suffering. One worker told of an anti-crime drive against robbers and rapists but said the government had done little to crack down on organizers of the booming black market. "How can you grab the children of high-level cadres" he asked. "They are beyond reach." Perhaps so, but they are not beyond satire. A new play titled "Rights and Law" has been delighting sellout audiences with its caustic commentary on political corruption. "People like this drama becuase it has some basis in reality," said one citizen. At least one local official in Sichuan Province believes so. Determined to put the government's high-minded slogans into practice, the leader drafted a tough new ethics code for cadres, banning official limousines, free theater tickets and other special favors.

Such policies sit well with the man in the street in China. And so does the open-door policy that many believe the government will not quite be able to shut. "The ball is in motion," said one resident of Peking. "Higher-ups and dissidents may go under. But the man on the street just keeps ticking along." ●

CIA Smuggling Heroin

By Gregory Tarpinian

For those aware of the horror petpetrated on the people of this country by sale of narcotics it is hard to believe that one's own government is involved in the trafficking of heroin. But as a A.W. McCoy wrote in his The Politics of Heroin in Southeast Asia "American diplomats and secret agents have been involved in the narcotics traffic at three levels: (1) coincidental complicity by allying with groups actively engaged in the drug traffic; (2) abetting the traffic by covering up for known heroin traffickers and condoming their involvements; (3) and active engagement in the transport of opium and heroin. It is ironic, to say the lease, that America's heroin plague is of its own making."

In early March, Attorney General Benjamin Civiletti addressed a special Washington conference of federal, local and state law enforcement officials and warned of the expected flood of heroin into the U.S.. At the same meeting, Peter Bessinger, of the Drug Enforcement Agency of the Justice Department, told the conference that his intelligence reports showed opium production in the Afghan-Pakistan area to have doubled last year reaching 1600 metric tons.

It is an interesting fact that the Afghan "rebels" who nians was that this replicated part of the basic mideast problem: non-Plaestinians speaking for Palestinians. To Jamila and me, as well as to other members of the Third World community, this was a complaint we felt kinship with - how often have we had to listen to people not of our own choosing (neocolonialists, whites, and so on) quote our own histories in our faces and speak in eloquent tones about our situations? On top of this was the fact that weeks earlier it had been decided that decisions about workshops would be considered within a framewhork of anti-imperialist guidelines.

There were a variety of outlooks, on the part of different people, concerning how the situation should be dealt with. Some said the workshop had already been scheduled and no further questions should be raised. Others said it should be settled at a steering committee meeting, or that a few people should get together privately and figure something out, or that nobody should do anything at all and if the Palestinians felt so upset thuy should come themselves to a meeting and make their point: it was up to them and not anybody else.

In the midst of all this, Jamila and I began to develop a clear sense of what we felt should be done. First of all, we ourselves had serious questions about what this person who was supposed to run the workshop was going to say - about South Africa? the Palestinians? discrimination against black of "oriental" Jews in Israel? But aside from these concerns we also had a commitment to the fact that if these questions, or any others, were going to be raised, this should be done not in behind-the-scene dialogues but in the largest possible forum. Therefore we argued that neither subcommittees or steering committee should make the decision, but that it should be done at a general meeting. At first some people resisted making such a big thing out of the issue. Such resistance stemmed from a number of sources - politics, personal time constraints, feelings of unfamiliarity with the subject, and so on. In spite of this, though, it was eventually decided that the more people who made the decision the better the process would be. So it was agreed that the issue would be raised at a general meeting.

Prior to the meeting at which the controversial workshop was going to be discussed, both the Palestinian woman and the Jewish women who were going to speak were informed concerning the kinds of questions that were going to be raised. When the meeting finally started, there wasn't at first any noticeable large enthusiasm for the Palestinian position. But as the dialogue continued, it became clear that the main issue at hand was a question of self-determination (i.e., should we support a workshop in which a non-Paliestinian, whose politics we weren't sure of in anti-imperialist terms, was going to speak about about the Palestinian question? At this point a clear majority of the people present swung towards the position put forward by the Palestinian woman: such a workshop would be out of keeping with International Women's Week's political guidelines.

The role of Jamila and I in all this was that we used all our resources to make sure the propsed workshop was discussed out in the open, in the widest possible forum, in a democratic and internationalist way. In this we were successful. We also, along with others, made sure that both the Palestinian and Jewish sides were equally informed concerning what the nature of the discussion would be like. At the end of the meeting, although people were tired (and some still confused) the general feeling of just about everybody there was that something positive had occured: and out-front political dialogue.

It is also important to point out that subjecting a projected workshop to such critical examination wasn't an isolated or arbitrary event in terms of International Women's Week. In terms of planning for the week democratic discussion, debate and collective decision-making had been used to make every decision beginning with what the structure of the group should be like and the decision-making model to be used in planning. This effected everybody who was working on Women's Week. The Third World Women's Task Force, for instance, discussed a number of proposals for workshops put forward by its own members. At least five of these were rejected for political reasons.

(2) Racial Attack At The Center

Although the Every Women's Center made no atempt to find out about any of the background information just given, the staff did decide that they at last had their excuse for putting Jamila and I on the spot. Old racial scores, they felt, could now be settled.

On February 28, a few days after the International Women's Week meeting at which the decision about the workshop was made, Jamila and I went to a staff meeting at Every Women's Center. What we didn't know was that behind our backs the white staff had, in an unusual move, changed the agenda for the meeting. Everyone knew what was going to be talked about, except us. Little did Jamila and I know that when we got to the meeting we were going to be grilled for two full hours our "bad" politics and our lack of sensitivity to the Jewish cause.

From the moment the attack began, it was obvious that the staff had some secret racial reasons for its actions. Certain facts make this quite clear. For instance at least 10 other women, most of them white and some of them Jewish, had been involved in the workshop decision and yet none of them were being put on the spot. But that isn't all. It was also true that two of those other women (both white) were right there in the Center while the staff was bullying Jamila and I and yet neither one of them was asked to provide an explanation for the workshop decision. One of these two people had in fact chaired the very meeting Jamila and I were being criticized for attending. Yet it was only Jamila and I who were put on the spot. The Center was clearly waging its attack along color lines.

The reality is that the tone of the staff meeting wasn't that of either a political dialogue or criticism session - most of the staff acted like a bunch of whites thrilled out of their wits by the fact that they at last had a chance to gang up on these Third World women that they had been dying to get for so long. They were being so irrational and racist by this time that they completely forgot two things: (1) that they were making their accusations without knowing the least thing about how the workshop decision they were so upset about got made, and (2) that they were revealing their hidden racial motives by forgetting to question the white people in the Center who had been at the same meeting they were shouting at us about. And they did shout. They also waved their fingers in our faces and lectured to us about racial backgrounds and finally, looking for something really ugly to say, they called us anti-semitic. Jamila and I were stunned by the complete lack of discipline these people were displaying. What they wanted was an execution along color lines. Jamila and I, however, are still alive.

Given the staff's racist behavior, neither Jamila or I felt under any personal obligation to explain ourselves to them. Yet out of political principle we did anyway. We not only attempted to give them the full International Women's Week background of what had happened, but we also tried to help them understand some of the political issues at stake concerning the Palestinian question, which they obviously only had a very vague United States imperialist understanding of. We also as time passed tried to make it clear that as far as we are concerned anti-Jewishness is a ridculous backward position and that genocide or discrimination against Jewish people is no more tolerable than against Native Americans of Blacks. But we also asked them to please understand that the question of Israel as a nation is a very complicated one and that at the international level large numbers of Third World people (and progressive whites) see the Palestinian struggle for freedom as a key to mideastern peace. We also pointed out that for good reason many Third World countries view Israel as a white settler-colony propped up by US imperialism. We did not ask or try to force the staff to agree with us, but only to admit that what we were saying was an obvious sign of our honest attempts to develop a solid internationalist perspective on the complicated problems of the mideast.

But in spite of our attempts to explain, the staff wouldn't listen. This was because their real desire wasn't to have political dialogue with us, but was rather to release the pent-up racial hostility that had been building up in some of them over the last months.

All this is too bad. There are a number of white women who have honestly and successfully struggled to be supportive of Third World women. But then elitist feminists like those at the Center choose to spill out their racism and them suddenly we are fighting again along color lines and this sets everything back a few steps.

For Third World women who have fought hard both for women's rights and racial unity, the kind of behavior the Center has recently displayed is truly sickening.

(3) Subsequent Events

After the February 28 staff meeting, the Third World Women's Task Force requested that the Center apologise to Jamila and me for its arbitrary and uniformed criticism of us. The Task Force stressed that the issue of the Center's racism was a serious one and so the apology should be made immediately.

A few days later (March 3) the steering committee of International Women's Week also criticized the Center in a letter. Among other things the steering committee of Internatinal Women's Week pointed out that "for Suman and Jamila to have been singled out, accused of anti-semitism, and berated for two hours was not only racist and unprincipled, but also contrary to the goals and purpose of International Women's Week and Every Women's Center...An apology to Suman and Jamila is in order."

Finally on March 7 the Center replied to the Task Force. The letter sent was a good example of bureaucratic evasiveness. The staff admitted, for instance, that it had arranged a meeting at which Jamila and I were put on the spot without being given advance notice, but then the staff denied responsibility by saying that this hadn't been done "intentionally." Then, rather than trying to deal with the question of racism honestly and head-on, they talked instead about their need to "explore" the situation further so that they could figure out why it was that they Center's "Support networking" (fancy phrase!) had divided along racial lines." They just couldn't get up the courage to say the obvious: that their fancy phrase "support networking" was a cover-up term behind which they were hiding the fact that they, a bunch of white women, had ganged up on, in typical racist fashion, some people of color. The didn't apologise.

After receiving this response from the Every Women's Center, the women of the Third World Women's Task Force realized that the problem at hand was even more serious than had been thought at the beginning. It was obvious that the Center, either out of white defensiveness or white chauvanism, was simply not ready to deal with its racial insensitivity. This became even more clear when the Center's staff refused to accept an invitation from the Task Force to come to one of its meetings to discuss what was happening.

Once more, though, the Task Force tried to get the Center to act. It sent a letter to the Center in which they were asked not to misjudge the seriousness of the situation. They were also asked to do three things: (1) deal with their racism, (2) apologise, and (3) drop its anti-semitic charges. The Center was further told that until these three things were done the Task Force would allow Jamila and I to attend Center staff meetings. It was also stated that the Task Force would have no further dialogue with the Center until the three things were done.

Up until this time the Center has not responded adequately to the Task Force's requests. This has had the effect of pushing the Task Force towards greater activism with regards to the situation. Subsequently a strategy is being developed for the upcoming weeks. Just as with other local institutions - for instance WFCR - Every Women's Center must be compelled to meet the needs of the local Third World Community and to Submit to some degree of community control.

the U.S., China, Egypt, Saudi Arabia and Pakistan are supporting claim that they are most active precisely in the area international narcotics control authorities cite as the major centers of Afghan and Pakistani opium production. These areas are the Badakshan and Takhar provinces in the northeast of Afghanistan, the Kunar province east of Kabul in the Pakistani border and Paktia province southeast of Kabul.

The area in Pakistan directly across from these afghan provinces is also marked as being opium growing territory, including the North Waziristan region around the Afghan "rebel" and the CIA base of Miram Shah.

In the May 18, 1979 New York Times, Fred Halliday pointed out that "some of the opposition (to the government) comes from tribesmen who resist any extension of state power out of the towns and, in particular, the governments attempt to control smuggling across the border with Pakistan, to the east and south." These are the same "rebels" whom the U.S. government is supporting in their fight for "freedom." We must be careful that we analyze the facts of the Afghanistan situation before jumping to conclusions which fall on the side of the CIA and the Afghan heroin pushers.

brought out at the trial, were polygraphic tests taken on him, both having positive results.

Now, let's summarize this. Craemen Gethers, a Black man, is serving 8-12 years in prison, for a crime he didn't commit. His co-defendant, Earl Brown was started off to serve 3-5 years and is now released of all problems of the robbery incident. Earl Brown was arraigned during school time when there was much support from the Third World Sommunity and Gether during the summer. Gethers is now being kicked around and has been in more than 6 prisons since being arrested. Gethers has served more than 4 years without any parole. Now, presently, an incident where two white men shoe and paralyzed a Black youth will be eligible for parole in two years. As a September 1977, Craemen had spent over $1,000.00 in defense and he needs much more money and support.

As of September of 1979, Gethers has been at Framingham Correctional Institute, Park Drive Prerelease, Walpole, Concord Farm back to Walpole. Norfolk and presently going to M.C.I., Shirley in April 1980. While Gethers was a Concord Farm he was up for parole when a discipline report for possessing personal property was filed against him. He was then transfered to Walpole; as a result of the transfer Gethers missed his parole. As of April 15, 1980, Gethers will be in M.C.I., Shirley.

When Gethers informed Tony Crayton, Director of Office of Third World Affairs of all the hassles he was receiving Tony began looking into Gethers present affairs. Sheryle Armstrong, Crayton's secretary, made a few calls to find out what Gether chance are of getting out.

Ms. Armstrong called the Commissioner's and got in touch with the Parole Office. The Parole Officer. The Parole Officer, John Barry, said: "he was not familiar with Craemen's case, and if he was eligible, he will get parole." He said: "Parole is set by the court and by statute, Barry explained that one of the reasons for Craemen not getting to be released was that, "If Craemen could not be located, them this could be the reason why he was not there for his hearing."

Ms. Armstrong after talking with Barry called the Department of Corrections. She was told to call Commissioner Hogan and then she found out he wasn't in. When she called back later she was told that Commissioner Hogan would not be in jail Monday; but the question is not when the Commissioner will be in, when will Craemen Gethers be out.

Chanting, "Out of the Darkness, Into the Light, students will raise their voices to a concern recorded as early as 1967 in the Collegian. Sponsored by a coalition of campus organizations, the rally will seek University action on the issue by restating specific demands.

Seeing improved lighting as only a first step in decreasing the incidence of violence,speakers at the rally will relate the campus situation to larger patterns of violence, violence happening to women, Third World people, and other oppressed peoples.

This rally comes as the culmination of two years' efforts by students to bring full address of the lighting situation. Other efforts have included a lighting survey, numerous visits with campus officials, and an earlier rally and candlelight vigil.

A Vitamin a Day Could Keep the Doctor Away

Last week I found myself involved in four seperate conversations about vitamins. In the course of three hours I spoke with a fellow co-worker, a UMass football player, and two organizational coordinators.

If you were to take the life styles of these individuals into consideration, all of them most likely should be taking a vitamin supplement. The football player in particular. Unfortunately these four people share the same opinion that most of us have when it comes to vitamins, ignorance.

Most of us are told by our family doctors, if we eat the correct foods, we won't need a vitamin or mineral supplement. But how many of us eat the correct foods. For the few of us who buy the right foods half of the vitamin and mineral content is lost due to improper cooking, and who loses out in the long run, you, not your family doctor, he profits quite well from your ignorance.

I for one get more negative comments taking a vitamin than an aspirin. Ah last! the medical association has done its' job well. What few people know is this. Most biological medical problems are linked directly or indirectly to some vitamin or mineral deficiency.

Vitamins and minerals act as natures natural healers. When a vitamin goes into your body your organism knows exactly how to deal with it. From the moment the vitamin enters your system the break down process goes into motion, healing, feeding and revitalizing your entire body.

Years ago before foods were processed, sprayed, and chemicalized, by artificial fertilizers, a balanced diet would have sufficed, but those times have come and gone.

Women are the hardest hit when it comes to following a balanced diet due to dieting continuously. I would be at least ten pounds heavier if I ate three balanced meals a day. I for one, have a very hectic schedule and don't have the time or energy to sit down and balance my diet. So I take a few vitamins and minerals with the meals I do eat, or before going to bed.

Scientist are finding unlimitted uses for vitamins and minerals every day. Did you know that their are vitamins that can, help you relieve body tension, clear up your skin, lower your susceptibility to infection, stop bleeding gums, clean your body of chemical pollutants, lower your blood pressure, prevent dowager's hump, help in the aches and pains of menstral cramps, as well as shorting your periods, prevent or arrest the balding process, promote prolific hair growth, prevent cancer, and give you nails so beautiful you could be cast in a Revlon commercial, and all for just pennies a day. Its' enough to amaze you, but once you've been amazed you may get a little angry, and you should be.

Some of you will read this article and perhaps take out a subscribition to Prevention Magizine or some other publication or journal that deals with better health through nutrition, but most of you won't. Most of you will continue to think of vitamins as pills or drugs, which they are not. A natural vitamin is made entirely of food broken down to into concentrated form. Some of you will continue to fool yourselves into thinking that you are eating a balanced diet at the D.C. or at home, and the majority of you will continue to see your doctors for those little aches and pains, and he will treat your symptoms but not the causes. And when your old and senile they will tell you. "what do you expect your suppose to be feeling tired and listless at your age", instead of recommending lecithin which prevents senility, and is caused due to the fact that the brain ceases to produce its own lecithin after you reach a certain age and since the brain is made almost entirely of lecithin it begins to deteriorate. So if you've noticed that your grandparents have been getting a little forgetful lately give them a bottle of lecithin instead of a deck of cards, and while your at it throw in a bottle of natural multible vitamins. This is especially important because older people have a greater difficulty absorbing vitamins then when they were younger. If they don't have much of an appetite they probably need some zinc. I know I could go on and on and those who no me often say I do, but if this article has changed even one persons view on the benefits of vitamins and minerals enough to seek additional information it will have been well worth my while. A word to the wise once you start buying vitamins purchase the all natural brands, and try ordering them through the mail it will save you at least 50 to70 percent in the long run. And remember a vitamin a day could keep the doctor away.

Strike possible, tensions seeth at UM/Boston

By BRIAN O'CONNELL
Collegian Staff

UMass/Boston Chancellor Robert A. Corrigan, who demanded that the 26 students who occupied his office and were arrested Sunday be charged with trespassing, is "escalating tension" among students there, the UMB student trustee said yesterday.

Chris Alberto, student body president and trustee, said there would be "another occupation or student strike" at UMB, depending on the outcome of a student meeting there last night. That outcome was unavailable at press time, however.

Alberto said Corrigan did not respond to students at a UMB assembly meeting yesterday, adding that Corrigan "hasn't shown a genuine interest" in student concerns.

The 26 occupiers arrested Sunday were found guilty yesterday by Dorchester District Court Judge Paul King. Those 26 each face a 10-day jail term and a $75 fine. They are appealing the decision, however, according to a UMB spokesman.

Last week, the occupation began when 50 UMB students, demanding a 51 percent student majority in campus government, tenure for two black professors and reinstatement of a recently fired administrator, encamped in the corridor outside Corrigan's office.

In a prepared statement released Sunday, Corrigan said he would appoint three separate commissions to examine and report on: the role of student affairs; the conditions of race relations; and the nature of student particiption in governance.

Corrigan also directed that interim reports concerning

Guests picked by computer

By ED LEVINE
Collegian Staff

The University's computer will today select the 3500 students to be allowed guests in their dormitory rooms during Spring Concert weekend.

The names will be chosen at random by the computer, and the list will be posted in all residence halls and at the Fine Arts Center Box Office, said Bryan Harvey, assistant to the Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs Dennis L. Madson. If the students chosen do not wish to have guests, their passes may be transferred within the dormitory Harvey said.

Guest tickets for the concert, scheduled for May 10 in Alumni Stadium, will go on sale tomorrow at the FAC box office, and students will be able to consult the lists there before purchasing tickets, said Union Program Council Promotion Director Darlene Lorkiewicz. UMass students and faculty may purchase two guest tickets for $15 each and must present a current University identification to do so, she said. Free students tickets will be distributed beginning April 22 at Hampden Center in Southwest.

Each student chosen by the lottery will be entitled one guest pass, said Ken Burnham of the Office of Residential Life.

"The host's name will not be on the pass," Burnham said. "The only thing on the pass will be the dorm. A system will be worked out later so a person can transfer the pass to someone in the dorm who needs it."

Burnham said he would try to set up a system in which house councils would handle the transfers of passes.

Burnham said the names would be chosen from an "alpha list" of people residing in the dormitories. Out of the 10,000 people residing in the dorms, every third name will be chosen, to arrive at the 3500 figure.

"I hope there will be no major problems," Burnham said. "It's up to the students to keep each other and their guests under control. They're going to make it or break it. Problems will not be the staff's fault, they'll be the student's fault, and could be a blemish on a good weekend."

Groups ponder library future

By STEVEN SEMPLE
Collegian Staff

Looking beyond the current problems of the UMass library, campus officials and student leaders are reviewing proposals submitted by the Chancellor's Library Task Force to determine programs for the future of the university library system.

Director of University Planning Jack Littlefield, Jr., a member of the six-person task force, said yesterday the purpose of the report was to "present all the options for improving library services" to the university community. Seven options were included in the report.

Littlefield said the task force, appointed by Chancellor Henry Koffler, did not consider the superficial structural problems of the library, but proceeded under the asumption that they will be rectified.

Student Government Association co-President Richard LaVoice advocates a plan to return materials to the library tower, freeing Goodell for other use.

LaVoice said the Goodell building, now serving as the main undergraduate library, could be better used as a student services area.

The report is scheduled to be discussed by the UMass Board of Trustees Building and Grounds committee at Wednesday's trusteeng, LaVoice said.

"Clearly, using at least two levels of Goodell is a very desirable thing to do," Dean of Students William F. Field said. "The tower has not, to date, worked very well for anyone."

Field, also a member of the task force, said his major concern is to formulate a plan to expand services, while being aware of costs involved between $630,000 and $4,034,000, which Field called "ball park figures."

Monte Pearson, president of the Graduate Student Senate, disfavors the idea of separate libraries.

"One thing is obvious," he said, "the Goodell situation has got to come to an end."

Boston Globe in ecstasy as staff wins three Pulitzers

BOSTON (AP) – "Today is fun day at the Globe," editor Thomas Winship said yesterday after The Boston Globe received Pulitzer prizes for local reporting, commentary an criticism.

The morning daily's triple victory marked only the second time in the history of the Pulitzers that a newspaper has won three awards in one year. The New York Times won in 1978 for international reporting, commentary and drama criticism.

"Needless to say, we're perfectly thrilled," said Winship. "I like to think it is recognition of our commitment to serious investigative reporting and encouragement of free and vigorous commentary."

The Globe won a special local reporting prize for its Spotlight Team report on troubles within the Boston-area transit system.

Iran lets Red Cross visit; all hostages seen and counted

(AP) The American hostages in the U.S. Embassy in Tehran received a visit yesterday from two representatives of the International Red Cross in an apparent move by Iran to blunt President Carter's campaign for Western support in imposing sanctions.

The Iranian government agreed to three conditions stipulated by the Red Cross: that its representatives meet with all the hostages, that they be allowed to make a list of their identities and that they be allowed to notify the captives' families of the state of their health, according to a spokeswoman at the organization's headquarters at Geneva.

In Washington, the State Department dismissed the Red Cross visit as a "palliative," but acknowledged it could be helpful to the hostages and their families.

This photo, taken by an unidentified photographer at the time, and distributed by the Associated Press and United Press International in August, 1979, won the Pulitzer prize for News Photography yesterday. Begin arrives on Sadat's heels; differs on autonomy question

WASHINGTON (AP) – Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin pledged on his arrival here yesterday for talks with President Carter to try to accelerate the pace of negotiations with Egypt over an autonomy plan for Palestinian Arabs.

Begin said Israel is willing to keep talking as long as it takes to complete an agreement. And yet, indicating sharp differences with Egyptian President Anwar Sadat, Begin said an administrative council fulfills Israel's commitment at Camp David in September 1978.

Sadat, who was in Washington last week for talks with Carter, is pressing for a Palestinian council that has legislative and executive powers. He also has called for a moratorium on new Jewish settlements and allowing Arabs in East Jerusalem to vote in elections among the Arabs on the Israeli-held West Bank of the Jordan River.

But Begin, in an arrival statement at Andrews Air Force Base, said, "An administrative council will be the expression of full autonomy."

Begin's concern is that a powerful Palestinian council could be the first step toward a state bent on subverting Israel and, with Soviet support, threatening the population centers nearby.

But while taking an apparent hard line on the issues, the prime minister said Israel is prepared to accelerate the negotiations and to continue them until an agreement is in hand. He said deadlines have been set and then extended in the past, citing the six months needed after Camp David to complete last year's peace treaty with Egypt instead of the three months originally planned.

Testimony conflicts

By DAVID HERN
Associated Press

BOSTON – Former ranking Republicans – including former Lt. Gov. Donald R. Dwight, in absentia – told conflicting stories to the corruption commission yesterday about how they awarded state architectural contracts.

Talking different different tunes to the special commission on state and county construction abuses were Dwight and his successors as administration commissioners – Charles E. Shepard of Warren and William I. Cowin of Newton, the GOP nominee for lieutenant governor in 1978.

The commission is scheduled to hear today from Judge Robert Yasi of the Suffolk Probate Court, who was commissioner between Shepard and Cowin. The four served under former Gov. Francis W. Sargent who, according to one witness, did not get involved in design contracts.

Dwight angered the commission by failing to appear for the hearing, as requested, and the commission released testimony from Dwight taken at a private session in January. The transcript showed Dwight requested that he not be subpoenaed but that he agreed to appear if asked, subject to a "mutually convenient time."

SCERA spars over '81 budget

By MICHAEL SILVA
Collegian Staff

About 15 members of the Student Center for Educational Research and Advocacy met with the Student Government Association Budgets Committee last night to debate their budget recommendations for the 1981 fiscal year.

The budget hearing, which debated only five of about 20 category breakdowns at press time, has to be approved by the budgets committee before the Undergraduate Student Senate can give final approval.

The funding requested by SCERA for fiscal year 1981 was set at $112,198.65, $7,967.65 more than last year's budget.

Doug Morton, SCERA director said, "we're hoping they (budgets committee) take this proposal as the bottom line." All necessary budget cuts have already been made in the recommendation, he said.

"We're providing ways and means of advocating student causes, and getting large sections of the student body mobilized in effective strategies to promote their interests," said Mary Henderson, SCERA student director.

However, members of the budgets committee told SCERA members everybody has to "take it on the chin" and "SCERA shouldn't consider itself an exception."

SCERA was established in 1973 specifically as the policy implementation arm of the SGA. In this role SCERA now consists of committees on Residential Life, Student Affairs, Academics, Public Policy, Rents and Fees, Women's Issues and Anti-Racism.

"SCERA is the only student organization that actually saves students money," said Linda Geary, speaker of the Student Senate.

Locals protest Big Business

Thursday is National Big Business Day and rallies are planned in 100 cities and towns nationwide to "protest the excesses of corporate power."

Locally, the day will begin with protestors picketing the Western Massachusetts Electric Co. offices on Triangle St. at 2 p.m., Jean Kluver, a Student Center for Education, Research and Advocacy member, said yesterday. The picket will be followed by a rally at 3 p.m. on the Amherst Common featuring four speakers: Anna Gyorgy on big business' environmental impact, Jonetta Cole on it's Third World ramifications, Steve Mann, on labor issues, and Mike Best, a UMass economics professor, on inflation and economic problems.

Big Business Day is organized by "a broad coalition" of organizations including the Amherst Alternative Energy Coalition and SCERA. "Basically, the coalition is different interest groups uniting and saying, 'In one way or another, we're all suffering because of these organizations,'" Kluver said.

The coalition drafted a Corporate Democracy Act because, "the time has come to re-design the law to keep up with the economic and political evolution of giant corporations which are tantamount to private governments," the Act reads.

WMECo. will be picketed to fight proposed rate hikes and to make people aware what the hike would be used for, Kluver said. According to the coalition, the proposed construction of the Millstone III Nuclear Power Plant will result in a "totally unjustified rate increase."

"They (big business) think profit maximizing is rational. But its not rational and can be inhumane," Kluver said. "We want more of a say."

Selectmen plan jail expansion; UMass housing interns praised

By SEAN HARVEY
Collegian Staff

A pilot housing inspection program utilizing UMass student interns is progressing "quite well," a member of the Board of Health told the Amherst Board of Selectmen last night.

Stanley Niedzielski said he is very pleased with the four interns who are inspecting 400 apartments in Amherst.

"We couldn't have had four finer young people," Niedzielski said. "They are very capable."

The interns are inspecting to insure basic health and safety procedures are being followed.

The selectmen also heard a proposal from the Police Station Planning Commission suggesting a committee be formed to plan a new police station in an existing building on a new site.

"This project has made a significant movement by saying that the present facility is not adequate," Town Manager A. Louis Hayward said. "If there is property in the community to be acquired we should take the option on it or put the money into the budget."

Hawyard reported to the board on a section of water pipe installed last summer on Old Amherst Road made of vinyl lined abestos, which has leaked tetrachloroethylene into the water supply. Tetrachloroethylene is non-toxic but large doses can cause depression of the central nervous system and liver and kidney damage.

Hayward said the pipe would be flushed on a weekly basis. He added that the pipe may have to be replaced or chemicals added to neutralize the tetrachoroethylene.

Responding to Corrigan's prepared statement, however, Alberto denied that the Chancellor was serious about amending administrative problems at UMB. Alberto said Corrigan had issued a restraining order banning the recently fired administrator – Heinz Bondy, who was an assistant vice chancellor – "from setting foot on campus." Bondy had been popular with students and sensitive to their needs, Alberto said.

Meanwhile, UMB Professor Harold R. Bronk had sent an appeal to Corrigan, urging that charges against the occupiers be dropped.

"It was a mistake to arrest the students," Bronk – UMB faculty governing committee chairman – told the Associated Press Sunday.

Those who were found guilty, Alberto said, are planning to sue the arresting officers on the grounds that their arrests were made under false pretense.

Letters

From the Chancellor

LETTER TO THE EDITOR,

The issue of improved campus lighting has proven to be more complex than appeared at the outset and I share some of the frustration over the delay involved in implementing a comprehensive lighting plan for campus.

Although a comprehensive lighting plan for the campus is necessary to meet our long-term needs within available resources, I do not believe that all activty should wait for the completion of the comprehensive plan. In fact, the Administration has already taken a series of actions to improve campus safety.

1. We have arranged for new lighting to be installed in Lot 44 behind Sylvan and Lot 22 by the Stadium in the next few weeks. The new lighting in these priority areas will be leased from and installed by Western Massachusetts Electric Company.

2. On March 28, nine additional lights were installed in the P Lot near the Stadium bringing the lighting level to 1.9 foot candles, the accepted standard for lots of that type.

3. New mercury light fixtures have been installed in other parts of campus, with four along Thatcher Way, two at the North Physical Education Building, and six others in locations across campus.

4. We have requested the Western Massachusetts Electric Company to submit a proposal for converting the lights at the crosswalks on North Pleasant Street to high-efficiency sodium vapor lights.

5. Within the next few weeks we expect to receive three sets each of six different types of pedestrian lights. The lights will be installed in the Haigis Mall area, and will allow us to choose lights which meet our particular needs.

6. We have approved a plan to install emergency ring-down telephones in five key locations on campus. The telephones, which ring automatically in the police station when the receiver is lifted, should be in place for the fall 1980 semester.

The comprehensive lighting plan is only one part of our response to the need for greater safety on campus. The steps I have outlined above all represent progress in achieving that wider measure of safety. When I receive the comments of campus groups which have been asked to review the lighting plans, we shall be in a position to achieve that next significant advance.

Cordially,
Henry Koffler
Chancellor

From the SGA

Tomorrow, at 12 noon, there will be a rally outside the Student Union near the campus pond. You should do yourself a favor and stop by to see what's going on. Although the basic focus of ths rally is increased lighting and safety on campus, the central issue around which it revolves is a much larger one.

The problem of potential assault in poorly lit campus parking lots and paths is a very serious one to many students, especially women and members of the Third World community. Many concerned students have spent much time and energy in the research and evaluation which went into our lighting proposal. Imagine their feelings when the Chancellor's proposal recommended "corridors of safety" rather than increased lighting and ring-down phones.

Today's rally is one way to register your displeasure with the way things have been going these days. It's time that students show their support for the efforts of other students in their behalf. Whether it be to demand that our lighting proposal be taken seriously or to make it very clear to the legislature that we will not allow the quality of our education to be jeopardized by indiscriminate budget cuts, a strong show of support is essential.

If it takes a flexing of the student muscle to drive these points home, we must be able to demonstrate that we are ready and willing to do so. Our brothers and sisters at UMass/Boston have started the ball rolling, we must not be reluctant to pick it up. Come to the Student Union at noon and let your voice be heard.

LIGHTING: LOW ON THE LIST

by MARGIE FLANDERS, Day Editor

Recent problems with temporary lighting near the police station, in the Southwest Complex have been corrected by a new walk and more lights. But there are still areas of the Southwest Complex which are relatively unlighted, notables the road which leads from the complex to the Amherst Creamery.

According to Harry S. Hugill, director of the Physical Plant, the University requested the Building Authority to provide lighting for the Southwest area and the new boulevard, but the builder's contract hasn't yet been fulfilled. Thus, no lights were installed.

In center of campus, lonely coed walks with adequate lighting.

In dorm areas, she walks alone in the darkness.

Eventually, the new boulevard, which runs in front of the complex, will be extended cross-campus, out to North Pleasant Street. This, when funded by the legislature, will be completely lighted, Hugill said.

In the interim, he continued, lights have been rented from the Western Mass. Electric Company and should be installed in the Southwest parking lot and the next to SBA within a few weeks.

Otherwise, according to Hugill, no concrete plans have been made for lighting. To light the campus, and to do it correctly, is a slow and costly process, he said.

"We want to do it permanently and by a standard design," commented Hugill. Eventually, all the walkways on campus will be lit by an antique design lantern which is presently adorning the front of the Student Union. The boulevard and roadways will be illuminated by lanterns of a gooseneck design.

It is estimated that to completely relight the campus will cost at least a half-million dollars.

Hugill added that there has been little student cooperation with the existing lighting. It seems that students have been managing to break "unbreakable" lights.

Pleasure of self-destruction

EVERETT HARMAN

Try holding your nose and breathing through a narrow straw. Then bend the straw and try again. Imagine having to breathe that way all the time. A little frightening isn't it. Well you've just simulated a moderate and severe case of emphysema, the debilitating lung disease that kills 35,000 people in this country each year and destroys the quality of life for many more.

The ailment involves a loss in elasticity of the tiny air sacs responsible for the exchange of oxygen and carbon-dioxide in the lungs. The inflexible tissue eventually tears, and larger, less efficient sacs are formed. Subsequently, the bronchial tubes bringing air into the lungs may break down as well.

My step-father suffered with the disease for many years before his premature death. He always had at hand a spray-inhalator to open up clogged breathing passages should suffocation threaten. A tank of oxygen was near his bed to provide temporary relief from the great labor of just taking in enough air to stay alive. He had trouble getting through a sentence without gasping and panting, and even a slight physical exertion placed excessive demands on his inefficient respiratory system.

He was not a man who had been sickly throughout life. In fact, he was the extreme opposite in his youth, being on the varsity football, basketball and baseball teams of a major univeristy, an excellent swimmer and participant in many other sports. However, he started smoking after college and had a pack-a-day habit for a number of years.

Recent research has shown that while some cases of emphysema are hereditary, the vast majority are related to smoking. Autopsies have shown a high correlation between smoking and deterioration of the lungs. Also, every individual who smokes shows some signs of emphysema, a fact which puts to lie the feeble hope of many smokers that somehow it wouldn't happen to them.

Current theory suggests that smoking disturbs the delicate balance between elastaste and anti-elastase, a pair of enzymes whose function is to keep the flexibility of the lungs at an optimal level. The elastase breaks down excess elastic tissue while anti-elastase prevents the former from digesting more fibers than necessary. Smoking appears to inhibit anti-elastase, resulting in excessive breakdown of functional elastic tissue.

While research has provided insight into the causes of emphysema, it has shed little light on methods of treatment, and the disease is presently incurable and untreatable. Cessation of smoking does not reverse damage done to the lungs but can only serve to prevent further destructive action.

It is still difficult for me to understand why so many people persist in smoking despite the clear evidence that has been available for many years on it's contribution to cancer, heart-disease, and other circulatory and respiratory disorders. Whatever are the psychological needs that impel an individual to smoke, they must be extremely strong in order to cause such clearly self-destructive behavior.

Smokers seem to see their habit as a source of comfort, a sign of sophistication and a social tool. Most acknowledge its physical dangers but say that either the enjoyment warrants the risk or that they just cannot stop.

As a non-smoker I am disturbed that smoking is taken so much for granted. It is as bizarre a form of behavior as might be found in most any society on earth; the willful and steady self-destruction of an individual through the inhalation of smoke from a burning object.

Smokers seem to feel that they have the right to foist their habit on other people as well. A number of times I've been sitting at a table or standing in line when a person close to me exhales smoke right into my face. And to make matters worse, people often disregard No Smoking signs. As a result, I have gotten into the habit of politely asking anyone smoking in a non-smoking area to please refrain from doing so. To my surprise, I have never gotten a hostile reaction from anyone. If more people would begin to do this, smokers would become more conscious of non-smokers around them. They might also become aware that many people find smoking a repulsive and dirty habit and somehow find the strength to stop before they have irreparably damaged their health.

A FORUM ENTITLED "Biology as a Social Weapon: Social Biology Then...Sociobiology Now," will be presented Thursday at 8 p.m. in Engineering East Auditorium.

Proponents of sociobiology argue that sex roles, racial antagonism, and aggression are all genetically programmed. Since the field's introduction five years ago, critics have warned that sociobiology bears resemblances to biological myths—such as Nazism—which have been used in the past to justify social inequality and oppression.

A question and discussion period will follow the speakers' presentations.

TODAY AT NOON at the side of the Student Union Building, concerned students will rally to protest what many believe are poor lighting conditions on campus.

West Germans boost Olympic boycott hopes

By SAM BOYLE
AP Sports Writer

West Germany gave President Carter's drive for an international boycott of the Moscow Summer Olympics its strongest endorsement to date yesterday, announcing that the government did not favor sending a team to the Games.

Klaus Boelling, chief spokesman for the West German government, said it would recommend that the country's National Olympic Committee vote to boycott the Games as long as Soviet troops remain in Afghanistan.

The announcement, two days after the U.S. Olympic Committee voted to support Carter's boycott request, is expected to have a major impact on other major U.S. allies who have not yet made their decisions.

After the USOC voted Saturday to go along with the boycott, Douglas F. Roby, one of two Americans on the International Olympic Committee, said the decision could spell the death of the 1980 Moscow Games.

The boycott also could affect the 1984 games set for Los Angeles.

In Moscow, preparations for the Games continued. According .o a Soviet spokesman, "The organizing committee is calmly preparing for the Moscow Olympics. The decision of the U.S. Olympic Committee will have no effect whatsoever on our preparations."

The official Soviet news agency Tass said, "The Olymics will take place despite all the schemes, maneuvers, provocations, intrigues, convulsions and paroxysms at the White House."

The West German government's position is not binding on its National Olympic Committee. But, Willi Daume, West German IOC member, said the government's view "certainly has weight."

Roby had said the nations important to the boycott movement are Great Britain, France, West Germany, Australia, New Zealand and Canada. Also considered important are the Japanese.

Australian Prime Minister Malcolm Fraser said he was "very pleased" with the 2-1 vote by the USOC to boycott. He added, "I believe now that an effective boycott will emerge" and urged the Australian Olympic Federation to follow the lead of the USOC. However, the federation has been opposed to a boycott.

Japanese Prime Minister Masayoshi Ohira is to visit Washington at the end of the month, and Japanese officials have said Ohira wants a proboycott decision to present to Carter then.

Wilson looking for players to turn a 2-24 team around

By STEVE COOPERMAN
Collegian Staff

The 1980-81 UMass men's basketball season has already begun. No, there won't be any action in Curry Hicks Cage until next December, but for head coach Ray Wilson a new season began after the EAA playoff loss to Villanova.

Since the end of the season, Wilson and his assistants have been looking for the players that could start the reviatlization of the program. The final results of all their hard work are not known yet but Wilson has received three letters of intent.

The three letter-signing recruits are 6-6¼ forward Harry Kemp from Florida Junior College, 6-2 guard Kevin Bond of Detroit, and 6-4 guard Dave Genis from Wabash Junior College. The two juco transfers, Kemp and Genis, are eligible to play immediately, and Bond enters as a freshman.

"I'm really happy with the three kids we've got so far," Wilson said. "It's pretty obvious we're still looking for some big people. We think we're pretty close to signing a couple...just when, I really can't say, but I hope it's damn soon."

Bond according to Wilson, "could be a real outstanding player for us. He's a great defender and he has the quickness to be an excellent penetrator."

Genis is a strong outside shooter, sometning the last year's squad lacked. Kemp also has a good shooting touch and plays a solid team game, according to reports.

How does Wilson sell the program after a 2-24 season? "We keep selling the kids with the opportunity of coming to UMass and playing right away," Wilson explained.

Sox top Tigers

By DAVE O'HARA
AP Sports Writer

BOSTON—Dennis Eckersley, the Boston Red Sox's pitching ace, still isn't as sharp as he wants to be, but he was too much for the Detroit Tigers.

Eckersley allowed one hit, three walks and the only run in the first inning, but then settled down as the Red Sox launched their 1980 home season with a 3-1 rain-interrupted victory over the Tigers yesterday.

"I didn't have a good slider, but I thought I could've pitched all night," Eckersley said. "Then came the long delay and I had to get out of there. I felt much better than I did in Milwaukee my first time out. That time I just stunk."

In the first inning, Eckersley disputed several calls by plate umpire Marty Springstead. His verbal exchange with the umpire brought Boston manager Don Zimmer from the dugout.

Zimmer and Springstead went at it heatedly for several minutes. As usual, the umpire had the final say—ejecting Zimmer.

"It turned out to be a good move, the manager backing me up," Eckersley said. "I just tried to forget it and pitch after that."

Eckersley allowed just two more hits until rain forced a 56-minute delay with the leadoff batter at the plate in the Detroit eighth. Then he gave way to reliever Tom Burgmeier.

Fred Lynn hit a solo homerun after Jerry Remy tripled and scored the tie-breaking run on an infield out in the sixth inning.

The two teams are idle today before meeting again on Wednesday. Bruce Hurst is scheduled to make his starting debut for the Sox against lefthander Dan Schatzeder, obtained by the Tigers from Montreal for Ron LeFlore.

Gorillas down Eagles

CHESTNUT HILL - The UMass men's lacrosse team scored four straight goals in the fourth quarter to break open a close game en route to a 15-8 win over Boston College on the slippery Astroturf of B.C.'s Alumni Stadium last night.

Coming off the big win at Rutgers Saturday, the laxmen held a slim 10-7 fourth quarter advantage until unassisted goals by Lee Vosburgh, James Goodhart, and scores by Kevin Miller (from Jim Weller) and Weller (un-assisted) gave them some breathing room.

Vosburgh's goal came at 8:07 of the fourth quarter after Goodhart ran the full length of the field and fed Vosburgh. Ten seconds later, Goodhart scored his unassisted goal.

Vosburgh and Weller each had five goals for the evening, Dave Martin added two, and Goodhart, Miller, and Neil Brugal piched in with one a piece. Sophomore Tom Curran played the whole game in goal.

The victory was the Gorillas' fourth in a row, while B.C. drops to 4-4. UMass will be in action again on Wednesday in a crucial contest against new England rival Brown at home.

(See Donna Sullivan's story in tomorrow's Collegian for more details.)

Campus Sports Roundup

Mittmen host BC

The UMass baseball team's current streak of clutch hitting and steady pitching will be tested today at 3:00 p.m. when the Boston College Eagles come to Earl Lorden Field.

UMass (7-5) will face the Eagles (3-3) with BC's best on the mound. Lefthander John Cooper, 2-0, has not given up a run in the 15 innings he has worked. He shut out a respected Harvard University on the strength of five strikeouts, then collected win number two against the Massachusetts Institute of Technology. Cooper had six strikeouts in six innings against MIT.

UMass has won its last four games, doubleheaders against the Universities of Connecticut and New Hampshire, with either outstanding pitching or clutch hitting. Pitcher Mark Brown booked two shutouts, a 1-0 two-hitter against UConn and a 2-0 win over UNH. And in the tail end of those twinbills it was the wood that saved the Minutemen. A sixth inning rally brought the Minutemen back to a 4-3 win over UConn and Mike McEvilly's two-run homer in the bottom of the seventh gave UMass its second win against UNH.

Today UMass will start pitcher Chuck Thompson. Thompson, 4-0, has a 0.83 earned run average over 21 innings.

Bike team

The UMass bicycle team beat the powerful Dartmouth squad 910-836 Saturday. UMass riders took three out of the first four places in the 40 mile road race held in Shutesbury and Leverett. The 40-mile A (varsity) race had 38 starters from 19 schools including last year's Ivy League champion Dartmouth College. Other schools included Yale, Princeton, Rutgers, Boston University, Vermont, Worcester Polytech., Brown, Harvard, University of Delaware, Tufts, and seven other colleges.

Netmen at home

Coming off three victories in the past five days, the Minutemen open their home season today at 3 p.m. against Holy Cross.

"If we don't win 9-0," said coach Steve Williams, "I will be disappointed."

Players expected to see action for UMass are captain Dave Nowak, Sergio Strepman, Matthew Modlish, Rich Sontag, Neil MacKertish and Dan Gallagher.

UMass beat MIT 6-3 last Thursday in Cambridge and in a tri-match Saturday at Central Connecticut beat the host team 5-4 and Bowdoin 6-1 after the final two matches were canceled on account of darkness.

The Crusaders are 1-1 after victory over Clark and a loss to Assumption.

—SEAN HARVEY

Rugger's win

The UMass Rugby club destroyed the Massachusetts Institute of Technology and Amherst College Saturday, winning all three sides and setting a UMass record. UMass side B out-scrummed, out-rucked and out-tried a poor MIT B side for a 78-0 pounding, a UMass record.

UMass' B team started its barrage just minutes into the first half and refused to hold its fire until the final whistle was blown and the score was 78-0. A total team effort contributed to the record breaking score and the total shutdown of MIT.

Side A also battled MIT in Cambridge and came up with a 39-9 win. UMass built up a heavy lead in the first half with good passing and scrum control. Dave Packard led the UMass runner attack with 13 points kicking; two conversion and three penalty kicks.

Bruins, Celts advance in playoffs

BOSTON (AP) — Peter McNab and Bob Miller scored in the first five minutes of the game to start Boston toward a 6-2 rout of the Pittsburgh Penguins, enabling the Bruins to capture their National Hockey League playoff series 3-2 last night.

The favored Bruins, who had trailed 2-1 in the series, move on to the quarter-finals against the New York Islanders beginning Wednesday night in Boston.

McNab got his third playoff goal with just 3:49 gone in the game. Ray Bourque, who had three assists, took a slapshot from the left point. Goalie Greg Millen made a stick save, but McNab pounced on the rebound and scored five seconds after a Bruin power play had ended.

Miller made the score 2-0 at 4:57 when he took a pass across the front of the net from Al Secord and knocked the puck by Millen.

Dwight Foster notched his third playoff goal at 5:22 of the second period, and Wayne Cashman got his second on a power play about five minutes later.

Meanwhile in Houston, the Boston Celtics ran off a 12-2 spurt late in third quarter to take a 100-85 lead over the Houston Rockets and went on to win, 138-121. Boston wins the best-of-four Eastern Conference semifinal series, four games to none. The Celtics will meet the winner of the Atlanta Hawks-Philadelphia 76'ers series.

Larry Bird led the Celtics with 34 points. Boston forward Cedric Maxwell had 27 points, including 13 in the fourth quarter.

Nate Archibald had 10 assists for the Celtics and 15 points.

Boston held an 88-83 lead with five minutes to play in the third quarter before running off the 12-2 streak, with starting center Dave Cowens on the bench with four fouls. Boston built the lead to as much as 131-105 with two minutes to play in the game.

Forward M.L. Carr had 23 points for Boston, which shot 63 percent from the floor.

Gazelles rolling along nicely

By MAUREEN SULLIVAN
Collegian Staff

In the cool, raw weather of an April afternoon, UMass women's lacrosse coach Pam Hixon practiced one-on-one with goalie Robin Jennings. Hixon fired ball after ball at her. Jennings caught some, kicked some away, and missed some. After each series, Hixon told her goalie what was right and wrong about her positioning and handling. after a few words, another series of one-on-one would start.

Why would Jennings need such repeptitive practicing? She's given up only seven goals in the last three games, including three scores in the Gazelles' 15-3 romp over the Huskies of Northeastern University last Saturday in Boston. In that game, she faced ten shots in goal. At the other end of the field, UMass harassed the Husky goal 49 times. Among the personnel who tallied for the Gazelles were Jean Hackett with her third straight five-goal game, Cari Nickerson with four goals, Margie Anderson with two, and Julie McHugh, Maria Minnicucci, and Whitney Thayer with one each.

Assists played a key role in the win. Out of the 15 goals scored, 11 came with an assist. Nickerson led in "the helping hand" category with five assists, while Hackett assisted three times. Anderson, McHugh, and Thayer had one assist apiece.

With such an offensive powerhouse working on the other end of the field, why should Jennings worry?

Becuase of what's coming in the next weeks.

After a home match against Smith College tomorrow afternoon (NOPE fields, game time 4:00 p.m.), the Gazelles travel to Williams College on Thursday and to Harvard University on Saturday. Of these games, according to Hixon, Harvard will be "the most serious test we'll be facing this year."

In spite of the somewhat lightweight competition so far, UMass has not taken any team lightly. though they've outscored their opponents 44-7, the Gazelles still practice and play as though a championship is on the line.

So Jennings still takes shot after shot, hoping to stop every one.

While Jennings missed three times, her JV counterpart, Rita Hebner, registered a shutout in the Gazelles' 8-0 whitewash of Mount Holyoke College Saturday afternoon.

In that game, which was played on the muddy fields of Mount Holyoke, Betsy Mazeral scored three times. Martha Burri, Joyce Gresl, Cory Crawford, Linda Thayer and Ro Tudryn rounded out the scoring for UMass with one each.

The game marked the first win for JV coach Tami Gannon. They go for their second win Thursday at Williams.

CAMPUS LIGHTING

An estimated 150 people march through campus to demand better lighting on campus and an end to violence against women and third world people. (Staff photo by Wayne Rosenberg)

Administration seeks monies

"Time" and "money" were the key words used yesterday by Associate Chancellor Terence Burke when he described what measures are necessary to improve lighting and deter assaults and rapes on the paths and in the parking lots of UMass.

Burke, who met with some of the persons who demonstrated for better lighting outside the Student Union and the Whitmore Administration Building yesterday, said some of the additional lighting sought would cost $2.6 million in capital outlays for the next fiscal year—the 1980-81 academic year. The money and lighting proposal will be subject to approval by the State Legislature when it reviews the UMass budget request in the next few months.

In the meantime, lights have been installed this semester in some parking lots and pedestrian routes deemed unsafe and poorly lit. High pressure sodium lights, which produce an amber glow and eliminate shadows, were installed in P-Lot parking along Alumni Stadium and will be installed in Lot 22, also near the stadium, and in Lot 44 behind the Sylvan residential area.

Some of the areas lit this semester were scenes of rapes reported to UMass police since 1977.

Improved lighting is one of three components of a plan to provide "safety corridors" for pedestrian travel at night. Researched and designed by the office of H. Jack Littlefield, campus director of planning, this concept seeks to concentrate night foot traffic along specific roads and paths that would be well lit and patrolled by police (See map).

"People, light and security together" would maximize after-dark safety, Littlefield said yesterday.

The proposal was issued by Chancellor Henry Koffler on Feb. 28 to 16 student, staff and faculty groups for their comments and recommendations by March 31. Four of the groups have responded so far, Littlefield said.

Paper streetlight shines message at Koffler's door

By MARCIA MURPHY
and JACK GALLAGHER
Collegian Staff

By 1:30 yesterday afternoon, the paper streetlight had been planted outside Chancellor Henry Koffler's Whitmore Administration Building Office.

It had taken between 50 and 150 people, demonstrating the lack of lighting on campus, one and one-half hours to plant the light. Though Koffler wasn't in his office, four of the demonstrators of the Student Center for Educational Research and Advocacy's Women's Issues Team met with Terence Burke, associate chancellor.

About 75 other demonstrators, however, who wanted to hand Koffler an "open invitation" to meet with them April 22 to discuss violence and the lack of lighting on campus, did not know that four of their representatives had met with Burke.

All three entrances to Whitmore had been chained, so that workers in the building would not be disturbed.

After listening to four speakers outside the Student Union Building, about 125 demonstrators marched by the campus pond behind a banner that read: "Out of the Darkness...into the Light". Passing by the northern (ramp) entrance to Whitmore, the marchers saw a campus security officer and continued around the building to its eastern entrance.

The rally began at 12:25, after the changing of 11:15 classes, when Tildy Turchinetz, a member of the SCERA women's team, ennumerated the ways in which violence is performed against women.

"Violence happens to women of all ages, colors, classes and it takes many forms," Turchinetz said. "Rape is the fastest growing crime in this country: One out of every three women will be raped in her lifetime."

Meanwhile, from noon until rally's end, Gerald T. O'Neil, UMass director of public safety, and Phillip J. Cavanaugh, a sergeant in the public safety department, observed the demonstrators; first from the operating entrance to the main library and then from a distance of about 200 feet as the marchers travelled to Whitmore.

Asked why he was standing outside the library, O'Neil replied: "to make sure that everything goes smoothly."

After Turchinetz' speech, which drew overwhelming applause, Tony Crayton - director of the Office of Third World Affairs - spoke to the groups, whose ranks had swelled in the meantime. Crayton, speaking under the paper streetlight, said lighting on campus is not just a women's issue, that violence against women "affects men's psychology."

"People have been assaulted all over campus," Crayton said, "and we have the corpses to prove it."

As Crayton's speech ended, the demonstrators, now numbering about 150, began chanting: "We're tired of waiting. We're ready to fight. An end to violence is our right."

Two other speakers took the podium after Crayton. At 1 pm, about 75 persons began the march to Whitmore - one of whom was Dean of Students William F. Field.

Upon arrival at the eastern entrance of Whitmore, the throng - which had dwindled to about 50 persons - began chanting a variety of slogans, among them: "We're tired of living in fear. We want better lighting here."

Then, when the four rally representatives entered Whitmore, the marchers - with the help of a sound system, began singing and chanting.

A few minutes later, the paper streetlight was planted in front of Koffler's office window. The open invitation to the Chancellor - signed by about 75 students - was held next to the light.

UM offers free tuition for top prospects

By FRANK PAPSADORE
and MAUREEN DUFFY

The UMass Board of Trustees recently passed a proposal granting 40 tuition waivers, to be used starting next fall by qualified freshman and transfer applicants to the Amherst campus.

The waivers, called the Chancellor's Merit Award for Excellence, will be distributed among Massachusetts students excelling in either academics, athletics, or the arts. Fifteen award letters were mailed yesterday by the Admissions Office to some of next year's prospective recipients.

According to Deirdre Kedesdy, UMass/Amherst Dean of Admissions, the awards were provided as an incentive to talented Massachusetts students to consider UMass/Amherst for their higher education.

"There is an incredible number of qualified students in the freshman applicant pool," Kedesdy commented. "In academics alone, there were 545 applicants that were in the top five percent of their graduating class. We have to try and pick the best twelve students out of that group and offer them the awards."

The athletic department will also receive the opportunity to distribute 12 awards to applicants they deem worthy. The music, dance, and art departments will divide 12 awards evenly for candidates they wish to lure to UMass. The remaining four awards will be granted to deserving applicants that do not necessarily fall under any of the previously stated categories.

There was a tuition waiver committee established to oversee the selection process by the individual departments receiving the use of the awards. The committee members include Deirdre Kedesdy, Dean of Admissions at the Amherst campus; David Bischoff, Dean of Athletics; Ed Apodaca, director of financial aid; Dr. Charles Bestor from Fine Arts; and Al Wallace, an undergraduate student representative. This committee will monitor and review the guidelines and procedures for implementing the award program.

'No Exit' for Sartre at 74

Jean-Paul Sartre, whose philosophy of existentialism dominated Europe after World War II, died yesterday after a long illness. He was 74. Sartre made his reputation with a flurry of novels and plays, including the famous "No Exit." His philosophy was designed to shake off oppression and inequality, but his message was rejected by the masses, who found it too convoluted and intellectual. The materialist philosophy, as expounded by Sartre, held that man by himself is nothing, a creature without soul or meaning. Only man's commitment to a cause makes him different from animals or inanimate objects. Man alone is responsible for his own destiny.

Re-occupation at UM/B?

By BRIAN O'CONNELL
Collegian Staff

A group of UMass/Boston students, who are considering re-occupying the offices of UMB Chancellor Robert Corrigan, would face the same trespassing charges that resulted in the arrests of 29 demonstrators Sunday, university spokeswoman Carol Cohen said yesterday.

Student spokesman Chris Alberto told the Collegian Monday night that the students "were considering another occupation or student strike" if our demands are not met." The students are demanding a 51 percent student control of all campus governance, reinstatement of recently fired Assistant Vice-Chancellor Heinz Bondy, and tenure for two black professors, Monica Lloyd and Jefferson Cleveland.

According to former UMB Students Affairs Chairman Ernest Datsun, one of the demonstrators arrested Sunday, the group has given Corrigan thirty-six hours to respond to their demands "or we will take some kind of action."

Responding to the 51 percent demand, Cohen said Corrigan "does not feel it is his place to decide student governance. Any changes in government have to be discussed by the groups involved. Corrigan can not mandate this."

Cohen added that the faculty cases involving Bondy, Cleveland and Lloyd have been placed in binding arbitration, due to union procedures, and therefore cannot be discussed.

Corrigan suspended the 55-year-old Bondy with pay ($28,000 a year) and barred him from campus earlier in the week, accusing him of encouraging the seven-day occupation and interfering with the campus police's efforts to secure the administration building.

Bondy denied the charges in a Boston Globe interview Monday. According to Cohen, Bondy will get a grievance hearing tomorrow in Boston.

Regarding the possibility of a student/faculty strike at UMB, Cohen said she didn't have any judgment to make "at this time. There is nothing more they (Corrigan and UMass President David C. Knapp) can do at this time."

Collins urges student action for ed budget

By MARC FAGELSON
Collegian Staff

Cuts in University and Community college personnel and equipment funding, and the reorganization of state higher education as proposed by the state's Ways and Means Committee are approaching reality as the budget goes before the House of Representatives today.

"I can't stress the importance of University students calling their legislators in these next few days," Rep. James Collins, D-Amherst, said yesterday. "Students and faculty have been calleing their reps, and those representatives who have supported the University in the past will do so again. But don't put off calling," he added, "because those calls will determine the future quality of higher education in the state."

Two issues are to be debated, Collins said.

The possibility of the legislature reorganizing the state's higher education institutions is essential to stop, he said. The recommendation to reorganize would result in a single board of trustees serving the entire state system, which would "provide more expensive education of a lower quality," Collins said.

The other issue to be contested is the individual line items - or allotments of funding for specific purposes - in the budget.

"All of higher ed will need a $6 to $8 million increase over the state Ways and Means Committee's recommendations; specifically UMass/Amherst," Collins said. "The best indicator," he said, "is that UMA would not be able to fill approximately 120 faculty and maintenance postions over the next year." Jobs would be lost through attrition, not firing, he said.

The committee allotted no money for equipment in the University system statewide, and student aid is also hurt by their recommendations, Collins said.

Sleeping Beauty charms opening crowd

By SARAH HAMMANN
Collegian Staff

BOSTON—Sleeping Beauty, the nineteenth century classical ballet that for many has been a tradition of the Boston Ballet, warmed a chatty and receptive audience at the Music Hall on Thursday's opening night.

As the curtain rose to the strains of Tchaikovsky, majestic purples and aqua blue tones awed the audience. The Princess Aurora was being christened and heralded in regal fashion by her father the King, her mother the Queen, and an entourage of godmothers, including the Fairies Grace, Happiness, Beauty, Courage, Song, Temperament, and the Lilac Fairy.

In the midst of celebration, and swift-footed pas de deux combinations, the Virtuous Fairies cleared the great hall of King Florestan, while Carabosse, the evil fairy, clawed her way into the party in spider-like fashion. Although Aurora was destined to mature into the most beautiful woman in the kingdom, the underhanded Carabosse acted out the princess' nasty fate: Aurora would one day prick her finger on a spindle and die.

The Lilac Fairy, in flowing violet chiffons and smelling sweetly of lilac sprigs in her hair, cascading to her bodice, restored the King and Queen's faith and ensured the princess would fall asleep, rather than die, and would not be awakened until a handsome, young prince kissed her.

At Aurora's sixteenth birthday party, Carabosse arrived unannounced to bestow her 'gift' on the princess. The princess quickly faltered after wounding her finger on the fated spindle, nestled within a bouquet of flowers. In the pastoral, springlike party scene, the evil fairy descended to cast her spell.

The beauty had fallen asleep and was resting peacefully in a hunting scenario decorated with a translucent appearing lagoon. The Handsome Prince Florimund, Bruce Wells, and his hunting party set this playful and free-as-the-breeze mood.

The Lilac Fairy, Carinne Binda, in a series of dream-like fantasy motions, shows the sleeping beauty to the handsome prince. Costumed in powder blues and virgin whites, the Lilac Fairy teases the prince yet keeps him at a careful distance from Princess Aurora. The rippling sealike motions of the fairy's nymph attendants subtly screen the prince from the princess.

The Handsome Prince, overcome by his magnetic attraction to this beauty, kisses Aurora and sets the attendants, godmothers and parents rejoicing. The final act, in Tchaikovsky style, displays the diverse talents of several fairy tale characters—Puss 'n Boots, Red Riding Hood and the Wolf, Tom Thumb energetically danced by Tony Catanzaro, and Princess Florise and the Bluebird, charmingly played by Stephanie Moy and Nicolas Pacana.

Laura Young, a veteran of the Princess Aurora role for several seasons, was a bit off Thursday evening. Her slow attitudes and the Rose Adagio were shaky and near imbalance. By the time of her awakening and wedding to the Prince Florimund, however, her control and stature reappeared, an the viewers watched a performance more consistent with the talented Laura Young.

Prince Florimund, danced by Bruce Wells, demonstrated boundless energy and steadfast balance, yet demonstrated abundant grace with the protective Lilac Fairy and eversought Princess Aurora.

Deathtrap Comedy and killing weave thrilling show

By MICHAEL MARTINEAU
Collegian Staff

Deathtrap opens with an older, formerly successful playwright mulling over the possibility of murdering an up-and-coming playwright and stealing his new play, a sure hit. To reveal any more of the intricate, twisting plot of Ira Levin's mystery-thriller, which delighted a large Fine Arts Center audience Sunday night, would be morally reprehensible.

Suffice it to say that author Levin, whose previous writing credits include Rosemary's Baby, The Stepford Wives, and Boys from Brazil, has woven a devilishly ingenious comedy-thriller that is anything but predictable. It begins with its tongue firmly lodged in its cheek, and keeps it there for the play's entire hair-raising duration. The only thing one can be sure of is that there is no way to anticipate what unexpected chill Mr. Levin has lying in wait around the corner.

Deathtrap's leading role was impeccably acted by Donald Barton, as Sidney Bruhl, the has-been playwright whose last hit was eighteen years ago. He deftly balanced Bruhl's amiable, self-depreciating demeanor with the character's somewhat darker side, giving one the feeling that Barton, the actor, was having the time of his life. He kept within Levin's framework by striking a perfect equilibrium between humor and suspense.

The rest of the cast, consisting of Patricia Quinan as Mrs. Bruhl; Michael McBride as the younger playwright Clifford Anderson; Marian Baer as Helga TenDorf, a psychic; and Casper Roos as Bruhl's attorney; savored every moment they were on stage, as did the audience.

Michael McBride's brashness was a perfect counterpoint to Barton's controlled performance. Together they created a taut, fast-moving base for the play.

The program carried an intersting note. At the bottom of the cast list it read: "We hope Deathtrap holds a few surprises for you, and if it does, that you'll help us keep them as surprises for future audiences." With that in mind, perhaps I shouldn't say any more. There is a movie version of Deathtrap in the planning stages, and the national tour is just beginning. I don't know about the other 2000 people who saw Deathtrap Sunday night, but I'm not telling anyone anything.

An Absolute Treat

Buster Williams and Kenny Barron appeared in concert at the Cape Cod Lounge last Friday night as the fifth of a seven-part Duke Ellington Solo and Duos Concert Series.

An absolute treat, Buster Williams on bass and Kenny Barron on piano presented a one of a kind salute performance to Duke Ellington.

Thus far the Solo and Duos Concerts have been performed by extremely talented, young and upcoming artists. Barron and Williams are from the class of musicians that most of the younger musicians and many of the well established musicians find themselves rechanneling their schedules, reserving their schedules and preparing in advance, etc., to make a point to hear these two musical masters perform. This past Friday was just such a respectful and attention-calling issue.

Both Barron and Williams are phenomonal musicians in their own right. Williams has performed with such greats as McCoy Tyner, Herbie Hancock, Miles Davis and many others.

Barron has performed with such "jazz" greats as Ron Carter, Ben Riley, Pharoach Saunders and countless others.

Also both artists have recorded and performed separately as leaders of their own groups, and recently have recorded together on Buster Williams' albums "Dreams Come True" and "Heartbeat".

To begin listing some of the albums would constitute listing all of them. To list all of their recordings would constitute more room than this article allows. What I will suggest is: take some time and pick up some of their works. As a matter of fact I urge you!

As a Duo, their music blended and swelled, climbed and dove, causing a full-house audience to sit in absolute bewildered delight. Many times throughout the performance, an occaisional uncontrolled moan of approval or outburst of applause would break through the consistent flow of crescendo and decrescendo.

Anyone missing this performance, most dfinitely did just that - missed a hell of a performance. For the love of self, don't miss out on the last two concerts!

A Case in America: The Double Standard

The 1976 Summer Olympics was considered "the White Games." During the 1976 games many Black nations boycotted the Olympics. The reason for this boycott was the continuing racism in South Africa. One Black nation, Tanzania, announced that it was boycotting the games as a gesture against apartheid.

In boycotting, the Black nations emphasized the dignity of the Black man by underminding the international character of the event. A week before the Olympics started 25 countries represented by 697 athletes were out of the games. Many prestigious athletes withdrew from the games and this withdrawal played a significant role on the events.

Boycotting the Olympic games, now doesn't that sound familiar. The United States Olympic committee officially voted to boycott the Moscow games.

Vice President Mondale, in his speech to the Olympic committee said, "the lesson of the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan still waits to be drawn. History holds its breath, for what is at stake is no less than the future security of the civilized world."

The United States in it's attempt to show strong disagreement about the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan has asked other countries to boycott the Olympics along with the United States. The United States also had the symbolic, Former Heavyweight Champion, Muhammad Ali, represent them in asking Black nations to also boycott the Moscow Olympic games.

In 1976 the Black nations asked the United States to support them in their boycott of the Olympics. The United States did not. A day before the games the United States reported the following (quoted from a 1976 magazine) "There was a plenary team meeting at which, as it was announced by the press secretary, the American athletes voted unanimously to stay and play, regardless of outside pressure. That decision was arrived at despite what an American spokesman referred to as considerable sympathy for the political position of the Africans. The Americans were there to compete, not debate.

The United States is boycotting the Olympics in Moscow because the Soviet's are disrupting civil peace in Afghanistan. But they wouldn't support a boycott against oppression of black people. They also ask the Black nations to support them. Now figure out where the United States is coming from.

Editorial/Opinion

Anti-Semitism in real life

Oppression takes a variety of forms and is aimed at various groups of people. Against blacks and other non-whites the oppression is called racism, against women it is called sexism. These two forms of oppression are recognized and acknowledged in American society. One form of oppression which is either pushed aside as being "insignificant" or is just plainly ignored is the oppression against Jews, called anti-Semitism.

It is not my intention in this short column to present a detailed sociological study on anti-Semitism, but rather present you with some facts and opinions on how anti-Semitism is manifested and perpetuated.

Yitzhak Santis

First, one does not have to look under the bed to find anti-Semitism. Just looking around the campus on walls and in bathroom stalls one finds anti-Semitic grafitti. Such prose as "Hitler was cool," "Kill Niggers, Jews and other non-whites," "Gas the Jews" or "Burn the Yids" can be seen in the library stairwell, in the bathroom of Hampden DC, and in other places too.

While living in the dorms I had let the cat out of the bag that I was a Jew. Soon my neighbors on the corridor related to me in a totally different manner. I had swastikas drawn on my door more than once or twice. I found myself socially isolated from the non-Jews and the Jews on my corridor said they felt the same thing, a sense of being left out of the mainstream of the corridor's social life.

In the recent Student Government Association (SGA) elections, Jewish candidates found that their posters were marked with swastikas and anti-Semitic slogans, that their posters were being torn down with more frequency than that of non-Jewish candidates.

And last semester a student group received much attention for distributing anti-Semitic literature reprinted from various white-supremacist newspapers.

Institutionalized anti-Semitism seems to be at work as the administration still refuses, after eight years, to establish a Judaic Studies department. The programs involved would include the study of Hebrew, Yiddish and other Jewish languages. Jewish history would be offered as would other courses on Jewish culture. And, of course, studies on Jewish oppression would be offered. The demand for these courses increases each semester as enrollment in the few courses Judaic Studies has to offer grows. However, the administration feels Jewish culture, history and oppression is not worth the money or effort involved to offer Jadaica courses to the campus.

We live in a culture whose premise is fundamentally anti-Semitic. Why is this so? First and foremost Western civilizaiton is based on Christianity (as the East is on Islam). As a Jew, when I read the Gospels, I can't help but be offended by the manner in which the Gospels portray Jews. In John, the Jews are constantly persecuting Jesus. In Matthew we are blamed for having Jesus crucified. St. Paul's constant attacks on Jadaism leaves me feeling belittled.

The phrase "Old Testament" is indicative itself. To me there is no "Old Testament," there is the Hebrew Scriptures, or Tanakh, but they are not "Old," they are not obsolete. The Tanakh is my culture, my heritage, my history. Also the so-called "Judeo-Christian Tradition" does not exist. Jews did not concoct this phrase, Christians did. There is a Jewish tradition and a Christian tradition. Each has its own validity and its own values. But Jewish tradition is different and encompasses much more than just religious affiliation: it is a culture, a people, a land, a language, a folk tradition.

What I am describing in short is cultural imperialism. The Hebrew Scriptures were co-opted and became the "Old Testament" and Jewish tradition was co-opted and became the "Judeo-Christian Tradition." Also, in Western culture, Jews are made to feel that Jewish culture is "provincial," "too narrow" or "for our grandparents." This rejection of one's own culture for another culture is the sign of a dominated, imperialized people. The struggle for national self-determination, in the form of Zionism, is the Jewish struggle against domination, cultural alienation, imperialism—in short, against oppression.

The rejection by many Jews of not just religious values, but of the whole of Jewish culture, tradition and heritage is a sign of victory for the oppressor. Also, being assimilated in a basically anti-Semitic culture turns Jews into "anti-Semites." That these Jews cannot recognize anti-Semitism is analogous to not being able to see red in red light. This can lead to self-hatred; that is hating the part of yourself which is Jewish. This is also known as internalized oppression.

Not recognizing and dealing with Jewish oppression is only ignoring the problem and in effect adding to it. I can't believe less than forty years after Western culture tried to exterminate the Jews of Europe, that anti-Semitism has disappeared. A casual glance at Jewish history will show anti-Semitism to be a cyclical oppression. That American Jews are secure is true, but that security is relative and not absolute. The Jews of Europe, for instance, were once "secure" (or so they thought). Now they are dead.

With inflation, credit rates and unemployment on the rise and American national prestige on the decline, with the resulting frustration felt by more and more people over this situation, scapegoats will be found as right-wing demagogues find an audience. Jews have always been the scapegoat for such occasions and no doubt blacks will be scapegoated as well.

Anti-Semitism dead? No, it only went asleep for a few years. Now it is reawakening and rearing its ugly head.

It's a damn SHAME

To the Editor:

As a member of the fairly young campus organization SHAME (Stop Harassing and Mushing Earthworms), I feel compelled to respond to Cathy Hancock's letter in Friday's Collegian. Her remonstrance that rainy days are to be blamed for the multitude of deceased worms upon our sidewalks, causing her to gag, requires rectification. It's no secret that whenever it rains our underground friends emerge in a simple gesture of comradery, and Cathy, we've seen your cruel response. Yes, it's all on film thanks to a few devoted SHAME members.

As soon as the rain begins, Cathy dons her oversized boots and dashes for the nearest sidewalk, grinning from ear to ear. Hardly giving our slimy fellows a chance to smile, she makes like a kangaroo, mushing several-victims with each pounce. Who would have guessed that a mild-mannered exchange student from Nevada could cause so much grief throughout the worm population? We feel certain that UMass worms will rejoice upon her departure. As for the members of SHAME, well, I suppose we'll just have to find something else to bitch about.

Chiselling the Constitution

To the Editor:

Headlines in press and media now proclaim huge cuts in government spending by President Carter in order to balance the budget and try to curb inflation. Even deeper cuts are being debated in Congressional Committees.

How many Americans are aware that while this drastic budgetary surgery is going on, two other enormously long, complex, and far-reaching pieces of legislation, S1722 and HR6233 for Criminal Code Reform, are also working their way through Congress, but without news headlines? Or that these two bills (not identical, but similar in scope) would significantly increase the role and expenditures of the Federal Government in our lives, and decrease the power of state and local authorities? And at the same time these two bills would be chipping away at some of our most cherished freedoms including the right to free speech, to peaceful assembly and protest, to privacy, to a free press, to Fifth Amendment privilege, and a host of others

Particularly serious and inflationary provisions in S1722 would cause a huge expansion in Federal prison population due to elimination of parole, severe limitations on good-time early release, and failure to recommend alternatives to prison for certain offenders (consider the present overcrowded and chaotic state of our prison system!).

In 1978 a thorough and objective analysis was made of S1437, the immediate and very similar predecessor of S1722, by the Mann Committee from the House Judiciary Subcommittee. After extensive hearings, discussions, and testimony from a full range of authoritative sources the committee reached two important conclusions:

1. "The federal government should never usurp the states' function in the criminal justice area unless overwhelming evidence of a need can be shown."

2. Sound criminal law reform cannot be achieved in one comprehensive bill but should be approached in more manageable sections allowing careful attention to these vital matters by legislators and the public.

Does it not make good sense to urge our legislators (although Senator Kennedy is an originator and proponent of S1722) to vote against these bills until we and they are sure that, while we are appropriating an expected $149.3 billion military budget to defend our constitutional freedoms from the Russians, we are not simultaneously robbing ourselves of this same treasure?

An aptitude for bias

Each year millions of students are confronted by an array of multiple choice tests that they must take in order to continue their education or enter into a profession. These familiar computer scored tests—the SAT, ACT, GRE, and LSAT—are critical for admission to colleges and graduate schools.

Standardized tests have been challenged as being inaccurately designed to objectively gauge aptitude. Geographical bias and inaccuracies in computer scoring (often due to mechanical failures) have also been reported. Until recently, aptitude tests have been protected from criticism. Now experts are highly skeptical as to the validity of these intelligence and aptitude tests. Today, once a student is branded with a test score this score will largely determine whether s/he is allowed to proceed to higher education rather than fairly predicting whether a person can derive full value from an education.

Spurred by New York State's passage of the nation's first Truth in Testing law last July, the Massachusetts State Legislature is now considering a bill—S 238—that requires test corporations to disclose to students, on request: a. a copy of the exam they took b. their answers c. the correct answers. This bill, supported by the Mass. Public Interest Group (MASSPIRG), requires testing companies to make public their own studies of the test's biases, inaccuracies and validity.

This legislation will also help students who can not afford expensive (but often effective) "cram courses" by mandating that old tests be made available for review. Thus, everyone will be able to study effectively for the test, regardless of ability to afford private pre-testing courses. By making the test questions public, researchers who are not captives of the testing industry will be able to scutinize the tests for evaluation and improvement.

This is an important issue and it affects you directly. If you think the Truth in Testing bill should be passed, write your Massachusetts Senator or Representative. It's the only way they will know if you're mad. You could also help to get the bill passed by joining with MASSPIRG in their effort to gather names on a petition which will be presented to the Joint House and Senate Education Committee. MASSPIRG will be conducting a state-wide Truth In Testing student lobby day on April 30th. Drop by their table in the Campus Center or call 256-6434 if you'd like to get involved.

Carter's tax forms reveal fall from earlier millionaire status

WASHINGTON [AP] - President Carter, whose net worth slipped under $1 million in 1979, is seeking an income tax refund from the federal government of nearly $17,000, the White House disclosed yesterday.

The president and Mrs. Carter dropped out of the ranks of the nation's millionaires in 1979, according to documents made public on the day Americans were required to send in their income tax statements to the Internal Revenue Service.

The documents showed assets of $1,054,178.95 and liabilities of $160,874.60. Thus, the Carters' net worth was $893,304.35. Their total tax bill was $64,944.81, on an adjusted income of $193,823.77.

The tax figures were spread over 10 separate forms and included such figures as a $15.53 deduction for postage the awards were "long overdue."

Starting next year, qualified applicants will be nominated for the award by their high school guidance counselors. Candidates for the awards will be invited to the Amherst campus in September to gain exposure to the UMass way of life. While they are here they will take a general, one hour achievement test developed by UMass faculty members, in an effort to assess the applicants' competency for college level work.

Northampton native hits 113

NORTHAMPTON, Mass. [AP] — It may have been tax day for you, but for Anna K. Murphy it was birthday — her 113th.

Social Security Administration records list Mrs. Murphy's birthday as April 15, 1867, two years after the end of the Civil War and about 50 years before the advent of the federal income tax.

Mrs. Murphy, a retired cook, is the oldest Social Security recipient in Massachusetts, and one of the oldest people in the nation, according to Social Security officials in Holyoke.

Mrs. Murphy was born in Northampton and resided for most of her life in the city's Florence section.

By MARCIA MURPHY
Collegian Staff

A day-long conference on "Women and Business" will be held at UMass on Saturday, April 19 at the School of Business Administration.

The conference, developed by the Association of Graduate Business Women in cooperation with the Small Business Administration, is designed to give professional advice on starting and maintaining a business, and to discuss problems confronting women in the business environment.

Speakers and panelists from businesses, professional organizations and area colleges and universities will be at the conference, which is designed for both men and women.

"We expect about 200 people at the conference," said Gail Ovian, one of the organizers from the School of Business Administration, "We are hoping more men will register—we only have ten percent so far. It's coming along quite well."

Advance registration for the conferenc is $15 and registration on the day of the conference is $20. This fee includes workshops, coffee, a buffet luncheon at the Newman Center, and a wine and cheese party at Memorial Hall.

The 12 main topics of the conference include "Taxes for the Small Business Manager," "The Law: What You Don't Know Can Hurt You," "Barriers to Women and Minorities in Employment," "Successful Career Transitions," Estate and Financial Planning," "Marketing for Small Business," "Women Entrepreneurs," and "Dual Roles: Career and Family."

For more information and to register, call Ovian at 549-4930, extension 260 or go to 214 SBA.

JOHN COLLINS, SEMINARIAN

"My name is John Collins. I'm a seminarian. I had the idea of being a priest for a long time before I did anything about it. I was too scared of my feelings.

"But I finally took the plunge and it's the best thing I ever did. It wasn't a shot in the dark. Friends helped. Talking to seminarians helped. And prayer was the biggest help."

Perhaps you, like John, have thought about the priesthood or religious life but never really looked into it.

How about looking into it now?

Peters' grand slam boosts Mittwomen, 14-2

By RANDI MARCUS
Collegian Staff

WESTFIELD – Though the game got off to a late start due to a tardy umpire, UMass was quick to take the lead in yesterday's game at Westfield State College. Junior Kathy O'Connell had control of the Owls on the mound giving up just 3 hits and striking out seven in the 14-2 victory. The team is now 6-0.

Freshman standout Jackie Gaw started the game off strongly with a line drive to center for a single, then stole two bases. Sue Peters came up to bat and knocked Gaw home with a base hit. Brenda Simmons got on by a fielder's choice and O'Connell and co-captain Fran Cornacchioli each had sacrifices for two more RBI's. Westfield's Mary Leger had a base hit and reached home on a sacrifice by Jodie Padula for the first Owl run, in the Westfield half of the first inning.

In the second, Chris Couglin walked, Karen LaVerdiere singled and Gaw walked to set the scene for power hitter Sue Peters who took advantage of the situation by parking the ball deep into left field for a grand slam. Peters also had a three-run homer Saturday in the no-hitter she pitched against the University of New Hampshire. The Owls proceeded to use a field shift by moving the second baseman out for Peters' returning visits to the plate.

LaVerdiere again started a rally in the fourth inning with a single and was sent home on a Gaw hit. Gaw went three for three for the day and contributed three RBI's. Simmons provided a sacrifice upping the score to a 10-1 in the UMies' favor.

Westfield picked up its second and final run in the fifth, and the Minutewomen also scored two more runs in that inning. Coach Elaine Marasco decided to go with her substitutes in the last two frames. Sophomore Fran Troy had a base hit and Ellen Korelitz smashed a hit to center field allowing Troy to score. Catcher M.J. Forbes came to bat and ended the scoring with a hit that sent home Korelitz.

UMass will travel to Vermont for a tournament that includes a pair of double headers Friday and Saturday, where it hopes to continue their perfect record. The team will be home again on Monday to face Bridgewater State College at 3 p.m.

Mittmen fall prey to Eagles

By MIKE ESTRADA
Collegian Staff

The Boston College Eagles could not have surprised more people at Lorden Field yesterday if they had pulled this one out of a hat.

They arrived just 20 minutes before game time in an ensemble of maroon-colored vans. They seemed to be in no positive frame of mind as they took their first warm up throws in front of the dugout. Starting catcher Joe Casey didn't have his jersey on. When they took infield they looked like a second rate high school team; the fungo hitter was having trouble getting the ballup in the air. Quite a difference from the crisp, bang-bang warm-up of the Minutemen, starting the game with the number one ranking in the New England College poll.

It seems first appearances are deceiving. For it was BC that had the best of the wild and wooly 8-4 game. And the UMass defense, despite first impressions, looked about as steady as the Dow Jones Insdustrial Average. The UMass winning streak ends at five games.

Even lead off, back-to-back home runs by the Bennet brothers (Barry and Dean) in the ninth inning couldn't salvage a game that had been lost the inning before. In the eighth, relief pitcher Vin Todd's first delivery in seven games was tagged for a three-run home run by the Eagles' Leo Smith; part of a six run inning for BC in which starter Chuck Thompson (4-1) was pulled from the mound after giving up five singles.

The UMass ace faced only 10 batters through three innings and struck out the side in the fourth with a vicious curveball that was hitting the outside corner on the lefthanded hitters. In the fifth, two Eagle base hits should have gone for nought spare some careless UMass infield play.

BC's Steve Blanchette scampered home with his team's first run when Joe Caffrey was caught in a rundown between first and second. Second baseman Dean Bennett's throw was late to catcher Dave Oleksak.

In the seventh inning, a similar situation developed. BC's Mike Mayock singled to center and moved to second on a grounder to first. Joe Caffrey was walked intentionally by Thompson. Leo Smith hit a grounder to shortstop Vin Bonanno that the junior had trouble depositing in the glove of Dean Bennett five feet away. As the umpire called safe, Bennett noticed that Mayock had never stopped running. The throw was late and low. Oleksak was crunched by the 210-pound Mayock, also a football player at BC, as the second BC run scored.

In the eighth, everything fell apart for Thompson.

"I didn't feel any different really, I was still strong," Thompson said. (Mark) Brown said I was keeping them off balance and then I wasn't. My curve ball wasn't as sharp."

As for the defense, which coach Dick Bergquist called "loose". Thompson said "I know teams are going to make errors, it's part of the game."

For a game that had so many negative aspects for the Minutemen they did prove their ability to climb back. In the bottom of the eighth, eight runs down, back to back singles by Mike McEvilly (2 for 4) and Jim Aulenback plated two runs. UMass threatened for more with the bases loaded later in the inning, but Bonanno (also 2 for 4) grounded into a 4-6-3 double play.

Boston College hurler John Cooper, who had pitched 15 scoreless innings before yesterday, did finish the game for his third win against no defeats. Like Thompson, he was cruising through the early innings. His only scare came when mark Litano lined a shot off his right knee to lead off the bottom of the sixth inning.

UMass outfielder Mark Litano slides safely into third base in yesterday's 8-4 loss to Boston College. Litano had stolen second base and went to third when the catcher's throw went into centerfield. (Staff photo by Ben Marsden)

Gazelles defeat Smithies

By MAUREEN SULLIVAN
Collegian Staff

To those planning to go to the UMass-Smith College women's lacrosse contest at NOPE today, please stay in class, because it was played yesterday. The Gazelles, led by Whitney Thayer's five goals, swamped Smith, 18-2.

Smith never had a chance against the Gazelles' speed and checking. UMass controlled the ball with pinpoint passing, cradling, and overall positioning on the field.

Cari Nickerson put UMass on the board with two goals at 4:37 and 7:32 of the first half. Margis Anderson made it 3-0 with a bouncer at 10:42. Julie McHugh and Maria Minicucci added two more scores to the UMass slate by 16:05 of the first half. The Gazelle runaway continued with two scores by Jean Hackett. Smith College spoiled Robin Jennings' shutout with a soft liner to Jennings' left. But by that time, that lone goal kept getting less and less significant as UMass kept after its rivals from Northampton. Cari Nickerson's third goal made the score 8-1 at 20:00. Thayer got into the act with her first 30 seconds later. Margie Anderson and Holly Jennings put the Gazelles into double figures with four minutes left. Hackett scored her 18th goal of the season at 23:17. With nine seconds left, Thayer ended the first-half barrage with her second of the game.

Thayer resumed the slaugher at 4:12; Anderson made it 15-1 45 seconds later. A Gazelle miscue caused a Smith attacker to bomb upfield unguarded and score at 6:37. With Thayer's third and Julie Hall's first within the seven-minute mark, there was no scoring until 23:40, when Thayer shoveled in the final goal.

A last-minute notice put the JVs into action, but they too handled Smith easily, taking a 9-3 win. Checking and clearing the ball paced UMass throughout the game, as Smith could not connect on passes very well. Betsy Mazeral, Martha Burri, and Joyce Gresl scored for UMass in the first half. For second half scoring, Linda Thayer led the offense with two goals, while Burri, Gresl, Nina Holstrom and Debbie Alberts had one each. All three Smith goals came in the second half.

Men's tennis wins

The men's tennis team upped it's record to 4-1 with a 9-0 whitewashing of Holy Cross College yesterday at Boyden Courts.

The Minutemen didn't drop a set as they won their first home match of the season.

In singles action, Sergio Strepman at number one and Mark Huetteman at number two won convincingly 6-1, 6-2, and 6-0, 6-2.

Dan Gallagher, at number three, whippped his opponent 6-3, 6-0 and Rich Sontag, at number four, won 6-1, 6-3.

Captain Dave Nowak at number five trounced his opponent 6-1, 6-0 and Neil MacKertish at number six, overwhelmed opponent 6-0, 6-0.

"It was definitely a slaughter," Sontag said. "They weren't very good."

In doubles action Huetteman and Matthew Modlish at number one defeated their opponents and sophmores Craig Turner and Dave Kim at number three won.

At number two, freshmen Mark Gelinas and Nick Julian won 6-2, 7-5.

"Holy Cross is not that strong a team," head coach Steve Williams said. "Nobody was really pressed. Our players were basically better than theirs."

The Minutemen's next match is Sunday at Boston College.

"They're a tough team," Williams said. "It will be a good accomplishment if we can beat them."

Williams said he expects to find out some time near the end of this week whether UMass will be playing in the A or B division for this year's New England championships.

SEAN HARVEY

Laxmen climb in polls

As a result of a four-game winning streak that included wins Saturday at Rutgers and Monday at Boston College, the UMass men's lacrosse team jumped five places in the coaches' national lacrosse poll to ninth place and went from third to second in New England.

Skip Vosburgh had an incredible five goals, one assist and fourteen ground balls off of the astroturf at Boston College's Alumni Stadium in the Gorillas' 15-8 win over the Eagles Monday night. Jim Weller had five and Dave Martin tossed in two en route to the Gorilla win.

"BC is a much improved lacrosse team," head coach Dick Garber said, "they have played some good games. We ran a couple of nice fast breaks. Jimmy Weller played a great game at attack and the defensive midfielders were outstanding," he said.

The UMass defense and defensive midfield did their stuff in the first half shutting down any BC offensive attack and holding the Eagles to just two goals in two quarters.

The Gorillas finished off the first half with two unanswered goals to boost the lead to 6-2. At 10:49 Vosburgh tossed in his second on a man-up situation, assisted by Paul Weller. Three minutes later, after a great save by UMass goalie Tom Curran, Chris Corin assisted Martin on his second tally of the day.

B.C.'s Pat Coleman brought the Eagles back into the game scoring one and assisting on another bringing the score to 7-4.

Midway through the fourth quarter, James Goodhart helped drum up another substantial lead, outrunning four BC men, and passing to Vosburgh who made the score. Ten seconds later, Goodhart tossed in one of his own to give the Gorillas a 12-7 lead.

With less than five minutes left to play, Paul Fogarty intercepted a BC pass, lost the ball in crowded territory, manged to scoop it up and then set up Jim Weller's fifth goal.

Neil Brugal got on the boards in the final minutes of play tossing in the final goal of the evening, giving UMass a 15-8 win.

Goalie Curran had 16 saves, eight per half. UMass got control of 76 ground balls to BC's 50, Vosburgh leading with 14 and Mike Lewis following with eight.

Today the Gorillas take on Brown, ranked eleventh nationally and third in New England. Brown defeated UMass last year 15-13, and according to Garber, "Brown is the only team in New England to beat us in 5 years."

Linksters tie

The UMass men's golf team finished tied with Dartmouth at 387, in its second tri-match of the season at Hickory Ridge C.C. in Amherst. Amherst College finished third with 398.

Sophomore Bob Gladchuk led the way for the Minutemen, shooting a one-over-par 73. Gladchuk's effort was overshadowed by Dartmouth's Mike McAuliffe who fired an even par round of 72 to capture the individual title.

UMass' Tony Kelley finished with a round of 77 and Jim Bjorge, who just joined the squad, shot a 78. Senior captain Mark Duggan was next in line for the Minutemen with a 79.

Marty Hunt shot an eight-over 80, Steve Midttun 81 and alternate Joe Tamsey 87 to round out the UMass scoring. Jim Collins led the Amherst squad with a four-over 76.

"We played well and should have won it," UMass coach Ed Vlach said. "But I'm glad we had a few tri-matches before the larger tournaments."

The Minutemen travel to Stowetomorrow to compete in the Massachusetts Intercollegiate Invitational Tournament and play at the Duxbury Yacht and Golf Club Friday against Boston College and Holy Cross.

According to Vlach, Hunt, Duggan, Gladchuk, Kelley, Midttun, Bjorge and either Bob Robichaud or Rich Murphy will be making the trip to Stowe and Duxbury.

House debates UM funding

By MARC FAGELSON
Collegian Staff

Amendments by three State House representatives to increase maintenance funding for the three UMass campuses were submitted yesterday as debate over the state's budget began on the floor of the House.

Rep. James Collins, D-Amherst, amended increases for the Amherst campus, while Andrew Collaro, D-Worcester, and Paul White, D-Boston, amended increases for the Worcester and Boston campuses respectively.

The amendments are "one part of the battle," Ken Masakowski, a legislative research director for the Student Center for Education, Research and Advocacy, said yesterday.

If increases are not made in the budget's present form, between 102 and 160 administrative and janitorial jobs would be lost through attrition and lay-offs, he said.

At press time, no debate on the proposed reorganization plan had occured.

The reorganization plan would faze out the Boards of Higher Education and Educational Affairs and place the state's higher education system under one Board of Regents, Mosakowski said. The Board would have only 15 members, while the state system has 25 schools, he added.

But lobbying by 50 students, who rode to Boston yesterday with the SCERA Public Policy Team, changed the votes of legislators who were in favor of the plan.

"The voting could come down to a difference of 10 votes," Mosakowski said. "Lobbying and interviewing of legislators by students has shifted the voting by seven votes so far."

Nationwide testing agencies target of bills

SAT scoring methods may be opened up

By DEBBIE ASBRAND
Collegian Staff

Nationwide testing agencies such as the College Entrance Examination Board have been the target of pending legislation which proposes that test answers and background information be disclosed, according to State Rep. James Collins, D-Amherst.

Two bills filed in December by Senators Alan D. Sisitsky, D-Springfield, and Carol Amick, D-Bedford, would open up the testing process to all student taking the tests.

One of the bills would require that questions on standardized tests for admission to post-secondary or graduate professional schools be disclosed to the chancellor of the state Board of Higher Education, and that the results be made public.

The second bill would entitle students or parents to review test questions and answers on standardized test, and would require that background information used in preparing the exams be made available at least once a year.

Collins, co-sponsor of the bills and a member of the state legislature's Joint Education Committee, is in favor of the overall concept of disclosure.

"The bill is presently in the Committee on Education. The next step is for the bill to go before the Executive Committee, made up of members of the Education Committee," he said. "The Executive Committee gives the bill a favorable or unfavorable report, and then it is voted on by the entire legistlature.

Collins also said the committee is planning to hold a forum to look at changes that have been initiated by the testing agencies since the legislation was filed in December.

On April 7 CEEB announced several changes in their disclosure policies, designed to reach a compromise between the current system and the legislature's bill, which would require full disclosure of each exam. These changes would consist of the publication of one nationally-administered exam from the previous year, including an answer key to correct answers, summary information relating to test scores, and other test measurements such as reliability and difficulty index.

The CEEB's policy changes would also include, for an additional fee, an option for the students to receive upon request a copy of their answer sheet, the actual answer key, raw scores, and instructions to calculate their own raw score. A copy of the actual exam the student took, however, would not be included.

The Mass. Public Interest Research Group has been heading a statewide campaign in support of the Truth-on testing bill at a number of college campuses, including UMass. They plan to wrap up their efforts on April 30 by holding a statewide lobbying day at the State House.

Ulrike Welsch brings photojournalism alive

By CAROLYN MOONEY
Collegian Staff

Boston Globe photographer Ulrike Welsch (pronounce Ulreeka) is a woman who tries to make her audience smile, who tries to "look for the little extra spark," who tries always to present something in her work that is simple and at the same time complete.

Last night at a Campus Center workshop sponsored by the Distinguished Visitors' Program, she succeeded in doing all three.

"I look for the little girl with swinging pigtails and the old woman asleep on her suitcase in the bus station," says Welsch, whose warm voice carries traces of a native German accent. Through a slide projector she shows human interest photos which appeared in the Boston Herald Traveler before it folded in 1972 and in the Boston Globe since then, photos which first earned her recognition as a local New England photographer.

"I love that cloud," she says flipping to a photo of tall ships silhoutted against the sunset, "the shape, the sunlight breaking through." She almost always shoots against the sun, using either a Leica or Nikon 2 camera.

At a workshop after her slide presentation, Welsch critiques students' slides with the same sensitivity to detail and eye for simplicity she uses to judge her own.

"I like it, I like it a lot," she tells a UMass student who has handed her an aerial shot of the Campus Center outdoor concourse, "but it needs more contrast. Did you use a filter?" And she launches into a discussion about different kinds of filters.

In 1977 Welsch published her first book of photo essays, The World I Love To See, which contains rich glimpses of life in Boston and New England. "I learned to see when I came to America," she writes in her preface. And beneath a photo of a little boy walking down a narrow cobblestone street on Beacon Hill, she writes that he reminded her of Paris but she was sad, "for he didn't carry an armful of bread." Now, between her job as a Boston Globe staff photographer and teaching photojournalism courses in the Boston area, Welsch is at work on a second photoessay book on South America.

In 1973 she was the first woman ever to win the Boston Press Photographers' Association Photographer of the Year award, and she also won the association's Picture of the Year award that year.

GM to layoff 12,000

DETROIT — General Motors Corp. will lay off 12,000 more employees from seven assembly plants in late April or early May, the nation's biggest automaker said yesterday.

Entire shifts will be dropped from five assembly lines in four of the plants, GM said.

The announcement came one day after Ford Motor Co. said it would lay off 15,000 employees, 6,100 of them from whitecollar jobs.

So far this year, the car sales of the nation's five major automakers are running 16 percent behind those of a year ago.

Already, about 165,000 production workers are on indefinite layoff. Total layoffs among the five U.S. automakers this week were estimated at 205,000 after counting those involved in week-long plant shutdowns.

Moscow boycott a "major coup"

BOXBOROUGH — The U.S. boycott of the Moscow Olympics is "a major coup for our propaganda," a Soviet spokesman told New England newspaper executives yesterday.

"You have lowered your own standards of being a free people," said Dr. George Mamedov, a research analyst attached to the press office of the Soveit embassy in Washington.

"It would not be the end for us because your athletes are robbed of the chance to compete with our athletes," Mamedov said.

Mamedov made his remarks in a luncheon address to the spring meeting of the New England Associated Press News Executives Association.

He said that while Americans seem to link patriotism with the boycott, the average Soviet citizen feels sorry for the U.S. athletes.

Maine prison uprising thwarted

THOMASTON, Maine — All 365 inmates at the maximum security Maine State Prison were locked into their cells indefinitely yesterday as an estimated 200 state troopers waited in the wings for a cell-by-cell shakedown to begin.

Corrections chief Donald Allen said there were indications that "various warring factions" in the prison constituted a potential threat of a prisonwide riot.

In Augusta, Gov. Joseph E. Brennan said he ordered police to move into the maximum security prison to prevent a "repetition of Attica or repetition of the nightmare at New Mexico."

The prison factions, said Allen, are: the "novelty kings," who employ other inmates to make novelties and furniture for the prison store; younger, "impulsive" inmates not interested in the novelty program; and the "older cons."

Georges Bank oil may abound

NEW YORK — The Georges Bank off the southern New England coast could contain 1.5 billion barrels of oil and 12.2 trillion cubic feet of natural gas, a federal government geologist said yesterday.

But Roger Amato, a geologist with the U.S. Geological Survey, said his estimate is "not much better" than an educated guess because of a lack of firm exploratory data.

"Estimating unknown resources is one of the hardest jobs I know," Amato told a conference sponsored by the government's Bureau of Land Management.

Cubans exiled to Costa Rica

SAN JOSE, Costa Rica—More than 230 Cuban exiles, some weeping with relief, others with fists aloft shouting "liberty" and "down with communism," arrived from Havana on two planes yesterday. One refugee said he was beaten as he boarded, others said their countrymen stoned them on the way to the airport.

"I was attacked by a group of people at the airport," said Juan Alberto Rodriguez, his face cut and a knee bloody and bandaged. "But I feel like it is a new day. I have left the hell of Cuba."

The arrivals were the first of an estimated 10,800 Cubans who packed themselves into the Peruvian Embassy in Havana the week of April 4..

Iran faces deadline

Associated Press

Iran has until mid-May to end the deadlock over the U.S. Embassy hostages or face possible military pressure, a senior U.S. official said yesterday. But in Tehran it was announced that the new Iranian Parliament, which is to decide the hostages' fate, may not even be elected by then.

A key Iranian leader, Ayatollah Mohammad Beheshti, told reporters in Tehran the parliamentary debate would take place "perhaps in June or July."

White House press secretary Jody Powell labeled as inaccurate a Boston Globe report yesterday that the United States has said it is ready to stage a naval blockade if the hostage crisis isn't settled by the week of May 11.

America's European allies, meanwhile, appeared ready to take some action in support of the United States and its anit-Iran sanctions.

The European Parliament, representing the nine Common Market nations, voted to hold an urgent debate today on President Carter's call for unified steps in support of Washington. The leadership of a large paliamentary bloc has called for a break in diplomatic relations with Iran if the 50 American hostages are not free.

Andrea Dworkin on power:

Pornography encourages male sexual supremacy

By DEBBIE WALLACE
Collegian Staff

Radical feminist Andrea Dworkin proclaims with zest that there are "seven discreet but interwoven strains of pornography as an expression of male power." About 200 five-college students attended a Dworkin lecture last night entitled "Pornography and Male Power." After the lecture, UMass student Joanna Rosenblatt called Dworkin's discussion "intense and powerful."

Dworkin names the seven forms of male oppression of women as "self, physical power over and against others, power of terror, naming, owning, money and sex." She analyzed each point, and began by saying, "The degredation of the female is the means of achieving power. It is proclaimed in art and literature, documented in history, and upheld in the distribution of wealth."

Dworkin has written two books: Women Hating, 1972, which concentrates on misogyny in fairy tales, pornography, chinese footbinding, and the genocide of witches; and Our Blood, 1976, a discussion of prophecies and discourses on sexual politics.

She began her research on pornography in Amsterdam in 1972, when it wasn't a public issue for women.

"Studying pornography is different than reading it. My research has been one of the most excrutiating experiences, I have been bored at times and enraged at others," Dworkin said.

The nature of the male self, she said, is used against women through physical strength. Physical incapacity is considered a form of femininity. "Women are physically mutilated by fashion or custom, and laws protect it, art and literature adore it, and history depends on it."

She said, "Not only are men stronger but they take women by force, from rape, battering, murder, torture, kidnapping, war, and verbal assault. But terror issues forth from the male and illuminates his very nature."

Hampshire College student Jim Hough said, "When I was growing up I was exposed to pornography. I got the same messages. I don't agree with it, I didn't identify with it. I agree hetrosexual male pornography reinforces certain negative messages about women. I don't know if normal straight male sex embodies what pornography embodies, I didn't feel victimized by her lecture, but I'm gay; I think that colors my reaction."

All of the students leaving Johnson Chapel reacted with enthusiasm to Dworkin's strongly delivered speech.

Dworkin said, "Naming gives men a great power. Male supremacy is fused into the language. If he gives the name, the name endures. If she gives the name it is lost." She refers to naming as the name we are given and believes that only women have to change (their names) as well as the labels given to women such as "weak, ignorant, and emotional."

"He names antagonism and violence-sex. He names her housewife and keeps her poor and utterly dependent," she said.

She said that historically, the power of owning has been absolute. "It is upheld by the army and the law. In many parts of the world the right to own women and the children they bear is absolute," she said. "In the past 104 years in the U.S. it has been modified to wife beating and marital rape, which are predicated on the conviction of a man's ownership of his wife."

The final example given by Dworkin of male power is that of male sexual power. "The reason for sex is conquering," she charged. "The male acts upon the woman. Virility is manhood itself and is an expression of energy, ambition, and assetion defined by men and experienced by women."

Dworkin quoted Virginia Woolf: "She is his mirror. He is giant-enlarged by his conquest of her. She remains the mirror." Dworkin added "His sexual power illuminates his nature. Sexual power originates in the penis."

In concluding she said, "The purpose of pornography is to promote male supremacy. In the male system, sex and pornography are inseparable.

Internships offer practical experience

By NANCY SEIDEL
Special to the Collegian

Bored with long-winded lectures? An internship placement in a chosen field, offering academic credit while providing occupational experience, may be an alternative.

According to Carol Stitt, assistant program coordinator of the Office of Internships, internships provide a "different window" of education. "An extention of the classroom," said Stitt, "the internship gives a student a chance to develop career skills and see how a field operates."

In the Curry Hicks Cage, where the internship office is located, more than 800 agencies provide internship descriptions for positions ranging from medicine to politics. The adventurous can choose an internship in Hawaii or California, while those who prefer familiar ground may opt for a local agency.

"The Office of Internships provides information for the student and helps eliminate unnecessary steps," Stitt said. The standard procedure is to hold introductory meetings for potential interns. Counselors later meet with individual students, assisting with the preparation of resumes and acting as a liaison between applicants, interested agencies, and the University.

While the Office of Internships helps obtain placements, a faculty sponsor must administe: college credit. The sponsor, chosen from the student's major department, negotiates with the student. Together they arrange a contract of academic credit requirements to be fulfilled during the student's internship, Stitt said.

The best time to apply for a placement, Stitt advises, is the semester prior to the desired period of internship. Those interested in summer and fall internships are planning now, as the process can take several weeks.

About 900 students inquired about internships last spring and 196 obtained positions, Stitt said. "These were the ones who followed through," she explained, adding that "any eligible student will be placed."

Library 'safe'—maybe

By MICHAEL SILVA
Collegian Staff

BOSTON — The Board of Trustees Buildings and Grounds sub-committee invoked an "executive session" ruling at yesterday's meeting to bar the press and others not on the committee from hearing discussion concerning the current library situation.

Before the session, the committee reported that the library is "now more than reasonably safe" and "the next logical steps are courses of remedy."

A request by committee member Sylvia K. Burack to transfer funds from the Bureau of Building Construction to be used to continue work of consultants working on alternate solutions to current library problems passed with no opposition..

At that point the committee went into executive session.

Student Government Association Co-president Rich LaVoice said although he could not discuss what was revealed at the session, "nothing was said you wouldn't know from the SCERA report," he said.

In other business the Buildings and Grounds sub-committee also unanimously passed a request by Vice-Chancellor George Beatty that a recommendation be made before the full Board of Trustees meeting next month to allocate $1,115,725 to bring state owned buildings on campus up to present fire safety standards.

If passed, Goessman, South College, Stockbridge and other buildings would undergo repairs to bring them up to standard. The dormitories would not be affected by this ruling.

Candidates vie for SWA presidency

By RICHARD NANGLE
Collegian Staff

The three candidates vying for the presidency of the Southwest Assembly appeared before the SWA Tuesday night ot discuss issues they believe are important in the election.

Candidates Jack Boyd, Bob Ross and Bob Jacobson, and Ruth Mazzola and Kevin Mangan, spoke briefly on the issues before answering questions from assembly members.

Southwest Assembly elections today—vote at Hampshire and Berkshire Dining Commons.

The election is being held today until 6 p.m. at the Hampshire and Berkshire Dining Commons.

Boyd stressed campus safety, proposing the installation of a stop light at Massachusetts and Sunset avenues. Boyd said his roommate was hit by a car there last year and he wants to eliminate the confusion between students and vehicles at the intersection. Boyd also said he was upset over the decision to allow only 3500 guests into the dormitories during Spring Concert weekend.

Ross, speaking for his running-mate Jacobson, said he would like to see a juice bar established in Hampden Commons, where the assembly now meets. He also said he would like to see more student services in the Southwest Residential Area, and he favors expelling house council members for missing two meetings.

Mazzola, speaking for her running-mate Mangan, said she would like to see Hampden kept "as it is" and also expressed the need for more student-run dormitories. She said student Heads of Residence would contribute to a more "community-oriented atmosphere."

In other business, it was announced that the Southwest Radio Station, WZZZ, will begin broadcasting tomorrow afternoon. The station is located on the 12th floor of John Quincy Adams Tower, and is currently recruiting disc jockeys.

Tenure problem at UMB

By BRIAN O'CONNELL
Collegian Staff

UMass/Boston Chancellor Robert Corrigan said Tuesday he could not be held responsible for the failure of two black UMB professors to receive tenure this year.

News Analysis

Corrigan, commenting on one of the issues which resulted in a student occupation of his offices last week, said he has made 15 positive recommendations for tenure during his first year in office, including tenure for one black faculty member.

The occupying group, calling themselves the Student Organizing Committee, occupied Corrigan's offices last week demanding changes in the school's campus governing policies, tenure for UMB professors Monica Lloyd and Jefferson Cleveland, and the reinstatement of UMB Assistant Vice-Chancellor Heinz Bondy. The occupation ended Sunday when both city of Boston and campus police arrested 29 student demonstrators in the school's administrative building.

Commenting on the tenure situation, Corrigan said there was only one black UMB professor eligible for tenure when he became UMB Chancellor last July.

"What people should understand, is there was only one black individual up for tenure, which means that six years ago, blacks weren't hired here. I can't tenure people who aren't here," he said.

Also, UMB student president and UMass Trustee Chris Alberto said yesterday "no decision had been made" by the Student Organizing Committee "whether to strike or reoccupy" Corrigan's offices.

Senate approves motion

RSO groups in deficit will be frozen

By MICHAEL SILVA
Collegian Staff

The Undergraduate Student Senate last night approved a motion to freeze all Recognized Student Organization accounts that are in deficit and reaffirmed its support to encourage the immediate support of Women's Studies by the administration as an independent major.

Al Wallace, Student Government Association treasurer, told the USS that 112 RSO groups are in deficit. These groups, according to Wallace, must now get his signature on any transactions until they are out of deficit. Any RSO groups having a budget deficit at the end of this semester must absorb the deficit in next year's budget, he said.

SGA speaker Linda Geary, who spoke at Tuesday's lighting rally, announced to the senate that "we are making headway with the lighting situation" on campus. "The educational aspect of where violence against women and Third World members comes from" would be the next step, said Geary.

"A part of this education," said Geary, "would be the administrative acceptance of Women's Studies as an independent major."

Rich LaVoice, SGA co-president, announced the residents of Cance dormitory had voted to allow two guests per person in their dorm during the Spring Concert weekend.

"I think students will be very dissatisfied with the recommended proposal that only 3,500 students will be allowed to stay in the dormitories," said LaVoice. The Cance decision, according to laVoice, is an indication that students can make decisions that affect policies governing student life on campus.

A referendum question will be distributed with today's ballots for the Southwest Assembly elections to gauge students feelings on the proposed 3,500 limit of guests during Spring Concert weekend, said Student Senator Freeman Woodson.

The USS also passed a motion to "support the movement to inaugurate the naming of buildings in the honor of people of color." The senate recognized that no buildings on campus are named after "women or men of color."

The senate supported the motion to call the library the W.E.B. DuBois Library and the Fine Arts Center the Duke Ellington Fine Arts Center.

"We're the ones using the buildings, not the Board of Trustees," said Geary, "We should be able to name them."

Geary said that there is a proposal to this effect "somewhere" to have the administration officially rename some campus buildings, "Hopefully, they'll take notice," she said.

Be witched by 'Vinegar Tom'

By DEBBIE WALLACE
Collegian Staff

Caryl Churchill is a compelling and energetic playwright. Her plays evoke a spirit of urgency through their politically-induced passion. She demands changes from society's traditional attitudes, and places the burden of change on us.

"Vinegar Tom," currently being performed at Smith College, is, on the surface, a play about witchcraft, yet it's deeper meanings concern inequality and oppression of the world's scapegoats.

Churchill explained her aims in a Collegian interview: "We did not want a hysterical, traditional witch hunt play. We wanted to show women on the edges of society, a mass persecution, and the scapegoating of women, Jews, and others."

This was the first of two plays written in 1976 and 1977 for the Monstrous Regiment, an alternative and politically-oriented British touring company, set apart from other companies by its emphasis on feminist issues.

Before researching "Vinegar Tom," Churchill said she hadn't realized what a strong Christian tradition there was of hating women. "I never knew to what a great extent the church preached against women."

This realization is communicated in "Vinegar Tom," a play that masterfully weaves images of persecution, male dominance and oppression under the guise of a witch hunt. The powerful impact of the play culminates in the closing question, "Who are the witches now?" The play forces the audience to question the roles of those who are currently oppressed. It makes the viewer ask the questions "who is now stopping me from fulfilling my dreams, who is scapegoating me, and if I could be killed or persecuted for my beliefs?"

The Monstrous Regiment was formed in 1975 by women who were dissatisfied with the roles offered them both by society and within their acting profession. This group of men and women is also committed to exploring new ways of relating music to theater. The group successfully accomplished this in "Vinegar Tom." The lyrics were also written by Churchill; the music by Director Andrea Hairston.

The periodic songs, chanted by a chorus consisting of the leading characters, add a musical commentary in the Elizabethan tradition. Many of the songs contribute to the haunting and upsetting themes and help reveal the "real oppressors."

"Vinegar Tom" places the viewers in a 16th century English farm village and introduces characters who become fleshed out and whole.

Alice is the young unmarried temptress who has an illegitimate son. She easily casts off the traditional roles and is viewed as strange by the townspeople. Liz Roberts as Alice captures the audience from the first flirtatous sway of her tattered dress. She maintains her character expertly and is able to portray a wide range of emotions, quickly changing with her moods. Along with a beautiful singing voice, Roberts presents a convincing, often garish innocence. She makes Alice a multi-dimensional character and Alice's playful quality makes the audience love her in spite of her harshness.

Betty is the rich woman who has gone mad in order to prevent an undesired prearranged marriage. She wants to be left alone, but is sent to a doctor to be cured of her strange nature. Hillary Nelson as Betty achieves a number of emotionally-tingling moments. She masters a sense of dreamy voidness as Betty, as well as a lust for independence.

Susan is Alice's best friend and a dutiful wife and baby-maker. At the outset of the play she is unsure whether she wants her unborn child and is plagued with the guilt once she destroys the child. Marie Ann Masuda, although a slight woman, often reveals much strength and maturity in her role but at times is much too child-like to be effective.

Alice's old haggard mother, Joan, played by Debbie Flics, seems overrehearsed and her shaking gestures are too fixed. She is often good at using her faltering, feeble voice. Too often, however, she exaggerates that along with her frail, decrepit physical appearance.

Margery and Jack are two of the village's more successful farmers. Wendy Sax as Margery also appears to force her actions. Her fighting nature and pursuit of a scapegoat are sugar-coated, as are many of her facial gestures. After a feud with Joan, who is constantly begging from them, the couple blames the "old witch" for causing the death of their calves. They call upon a witch hunter, Packer, a man with a good track recod of "discovering" witches. Churchill said, "During the Essex witch trials forced confessions were common." Churchill effectively plays upon her findings.

The most obvious fault of the Smith College production is the overly perfect set. A new tiled floor smeared with dirt detracts from the image of an improverished village and the carefully tattered costumes are too lavish to be convincing.

"Vinegar Tom" is a web of passionate dialogue used by the actors as a spider uses its silky net. "Vinegar Tom" continues at the Hallie Flanagan Studio Theater at Smith College today through Saturday at 8 p.m., May 16 at 9:30 and May 17 at 8:30 p.m.

Editorial/Opinion

A man can only imagine

JACKSON KATZ

I hadn't really thought about what it must be like to be a woman until the recent thing with the demand for better lighting on campus. Oh, I considered myself a feminist, and I felt like I was in touch with the problems that women face in this society. But I always looked at these things from more of an intellectual perspective, not from a truly personal one. This was sort of natural, I guess, because I'm a man.

Then I started talking to a lot of women, especially friends of mine, about how they felt about walking around campus alone at night. That's when I started thinking about how I would feel if I had to worry about things like that. It didn't take me long to figure out how I'd feel. I'd be pissed out of my mind.

I had never thought about what it would be like to structure my life and activities so I would never be out alone at night. I had never thought about the fear that women so often have when one of their friends is late and it's night-time.

And the thing about safety at night is just one thing. I thought that the stereotyped male role was oppressive. I thought about how I felt when people expected me to act macho, to always be "strong." I don't even want to think about how I'd feel if I were constantly looked at as inferior, submissive, a sexual object. I don't want to think about how I'd feel as a woman living in this society, which is run by, and set up for, men.

I think I'd have a hard time remaining compassionate and caring in a country where the ERA can't even pass, where rape and wife-beating and other forms of sexual violence are ever-increasing, where women earn 59 cents to every dollar that men earn.

I realize that I'll never fully understand what it feels like to be a woman. But to be honest, I'm glad of that. I thought I had enough of my own problems, my own struggles for changing the world. But I'm looking at the world through the eyes of a man. I can only imagine how I'd feel about my problems and struggles if I were a woman.

Negotiating solidarity

The occupation of Chancellor Corrigan's Office at the University of Massachusetts at Boston has come to an end with the arrest of the student occupiers. According to Student Trustee (UMB) Chris Alberto, the students occupying the office Friday night agreed to negotiate in good faith with Corrigan on Saturday morning. They consented to this upon Chancellor Corrigan's request. However, this turned out to be nothing more than a set-up. On Saturday, Corrigan met with the students but refused to discuss any substantive issues. He would neither compromise nor negotiate according to Alberto. He refused to tenure two qualified eligible black professors. He refused to investigate the recent abusive treatment of a black student by campus police. He refused to go along with any increase of student representation on University Committees. On the fourth student demand of rehiring Administrator Heinz Bondy, Chancellor Corrigan really out did himself.

Heinz Bondy is the most well-liked student administrator on the UMB campus. He is the only administrator students feel they can turn to when they have a problem. UMB students say precisely because of this, his contract is being terminated, and they are demanding he be kept on board.

To coincide with his refusal to negotiate, Chancellor Corrigan suspended Heinz Bondy Saturday and had a restraining order put on him to keep him off campus. This was done against the advice of the faculty and the Vice-Chancellor of Student Affairs and without informing any of the students beforehand. Then on Sunday, Corrigan called in the cops. Twenty-six students were arrested.

Ordinarily in conflicts such as these, right or wrong is a complicated matter. Rarely does one see the outrageous and ignorant behavior Corrigan is showing now at UMB. Rarely is injustice and stupidity so clearly spelled out.

But how, one may ask, does all this effect us here at UMass/Amherst? How does it concern us? Why should we care?

We care because they are our fellow students, our brothers and sisters, our cousins -- in some cases literally. We care because that's the decent thing to do. There is also another reason. Students at UMB are fighting for the right to have a say in the decisions that affect their lives. They are tired of others always running the show and leaving them with the short end of the stick.

Students at UMass/Boston want to control their own lives and so do students at UMass/Amherst. Though our specific problems may differ due to the uniqueness of each campus, our overall goals are the same. In supporting them, we are supporting ourselves. The saying there is "strength in unity" is true, provided strength is founded in shared aspirations and genuine respect.

If students at UMass/Boston are successful in winning more power for themselves, chances for us here to do the same can only increase. If on the other hand, Corrigan is successful in crushing the spirit on the Boston campus with police force and unyielding obstinance, it could very well set a precedent for administrators up here to follow.

Right now, our Student Government Association is under attack by the administration, as Collegian readers are well aware. The Student Trust Fund, which runs our buses, our coops, our Student Government, our Legal Services, etc., is in danger of being taken over by the administration. Rumor has it the administration is also after the Collegian. Little need be said about the administration's inadequate response to our lighting problem.

These and other issues can only be resolved in our favor if students stick together and support each other. Though the situation at present finds UMB students locked in a direct struggle with their administration and in need of support, it is not difficult to imagine the exact opposite situation happening in the near future. In light of this reality, I believe the time is right for solidarity.

An American revolution

Dear Sirs,

On April 21, Massachusetts will be commemorating Patriots' Day, a day put aside in memory of a loose-knit collection of smugglers, subversives, intellectuals, workers, students and street fighters; a group known as the Sons of Liberty, who sacrificed so much in the pursuit and defense of such ideals as freedom, equality, anti-colonialism, and democracy. But we should also remember the battles and martyrs of that same struggle as it continued past 1776.

From Abolition through the Indian Wars to the Civil Rights Movement, from Shay's Rebellion through the Veteran Uprisings of post-WWI to Berkeley, from the Boston Massacre through the Sacco and Vanzetti executions to Kent State and Jackson State, people fought for freedom, liberty, equality, and against oppression, colonialism and racism.

To the revolutionary honor roll that includes John Adams, Paul Revere, George Washington, Nathan Hale and others, add Nat Turner, Sacco and Vanzetti, Chief Joseph, Susan Anthony, Mother Jones, Mario Savio, Martin Luther King Jr., Bobby Seale, Viola Liuzzo, Allison Krause, Jeff Miller, Sandy Shoyer, Bill Schroder, Karen Silkwood and all the other victims of the struggle.

So when you take this Monday off, you should stop to think of what it's all about, remember that the struggle that was started in America with the Boston Tea Party, Boston Massacre, Concord and Lexington didn't end with the Revolutionary War in 1783, but continues through American History; through the Civil War, the Labor Movement of the Industrial Age, the Sufferage Movement, Abolition, Civil Rights Movement, the Sixties Movement, Ecology and No-Nukes. It is the same revolutionary spirit of 1774 that continues on, even through today.

Revolution means change; change coupled with direction means growth. So if you do remember Paul Revere, Jonas Parker and the Old North Bridge, also remember those that followed and continued the struggle, the revolution, the change, the growth, and also think about who'll continue the same struggle through tomorrow. LONG LIVE THE AMERICAN MOVEMENT!!!!

Hampden future still unclear

To the Editor:

In reference to the Collegian article of April 10th, "Hampden Future Unclear," the biggest problem is that the five students mentioned do not support the idea of a University Store, as alleged. Rather, they are looking to increase the use of Hampden's vital programming space in the following ways.

1) By setting up a nightclub on Thursday-Saturday nights with a juice bar, music including local talent, as well as recordings, and a BYOB policy so that the students, particularly those under twenty, will have a place to get together.

2) By increasing programming in Hampden Theatre so that if there isn't a production, movies could be shown, or rallies, debates, or meetings could be held.

3) By setting up a Southwest Resource Center with branch offices of SCERA Academic Affairs, and other student information services. This would provide a large amount of varied programs and resources to the students.

It is unfortunate that Southwest leaders allow politics to get in the way of providing services to the students. It's almost as if a "machine" were at work here.

I think it's probably time for a change, and the only way to accomplish this is by voting. So please do so on April 17th.

Breach of contract

To the Editor:

I find it disheartening that after all the praise, both said and published about last year's Spring Concert, university officials have decided not to allow all residents to have guests. Where was this policy stated in the housing contract? Thirty-five hundred guests with the familiar threat, as stated by Burnham, "They're going to make it or break it." I thought we made it last year. What will it be next year, 200 guests?

Carter concludes talks

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Carter's back-to-back summit talks with Egyptian President Anwar Sadat and Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin resulted in an agreement yesterday to hold non-stop negotiations in the Middle East on the future of 1.2 million Palestinians.

The intensive negotiations are aimed at translating Begin's 1979 promise of autonomy for Arabs living under Israel's control into a council elected by inhabitants of the West Bank of the Jordan River and the Gaza district.

At a news conference, Begin said he could not predict an agreement by May 26, the date set as a goal by Egypt and Israel. But he said the marathon negotiations could be extended, noting that the two countries took six months instead of the three planned to wrap up their peace treaty last year.

Meanwhile, the prime minister said, "Why be pessimistic in advance?"

So far, 10 rounds of Egyptian-Israeli negotiations over more than 10 months have not cracked any of the hard issues. They include the functions of the council and the size of the Israeli security force to remain for at least five years in the formerly Arab-held territories.

There was no indication in Begin's remarks or in a statement made by Carter in the White House driveway that anything more than a procedural agreement had been reached.

"We are delighted at the progress that has been made," Carter said at the wind-up of his talks with Begin.

"We have a long way to go before final agreement."

Begin indicated he had not budged from his view that the council should have authority over municipal affairs only.

He also said Israel would withdraw its military and civil authorities but maintain security in the Israeli-held territories.

"Hundreds of thousands of people would be killed if we are not responsible for security on the West Bank and in Gaza," Begin said.

Sadat has demanded legislative and executive powers for the Palestinian council and a limited Israeli presence. Egyptian officials have floated the idea of mixed Egyptian-Israeli patrols or a multinational force to keep the peace.

On another touchy subject, Begin gave no ground in his conviction that Israel has the right to establish new settlements and that they protect his country's security.

In one year, Begin told reporters, 97 cells of the Palestine Liberation Organization had been uncovered on the West Bank, another 23 in Gaza, and explosives and bombs were captured.

"It is a matter of the lives of our citizens," he said.

MONTPELIER, VT.—Vermont, New Hampshire and Massachusetts would work together during an accident at the Vermont Yankee nuclear power plant under a plan approved by Gov. Richard Snelling.

The governor said yesterday he has approved a complete rewrite of the state's emergency evacuation plan, which was drawn up in 1972. Snelling judged the original plan inadequate following last year's accident at Three Mile Island and ordered state officials to start from scratch.

He asked that the plan be expanded to provide for the evacuation of a 10-mile radius of Vermont Yankee and Yankee Rowe, which is located across the Massachusetts border from southwestern Vermont.

Spikers end home season

By MAUREEN SULLIVAN
Collegian Staff

The UMass men's volleyball teams wrap up its home seasons tonight at NOPE gym. Beginning at 7 p.m., the JVs will square off against Amherst College; at 8 p.m., the varsity faces the University of Rhode Island.

Both UMass squads have enjoyed successful seasons, clinching berths in the New England Collegiate Volleyball playoffs. It remains to be seen where the squads will be seeded, for tonight's matches should help determine just where the two UMass teams will be situated come playoff time.

Amherst and UMass exchanged victories over the season. In Division Two of the NECVL, Amherst and UMass are behind Division leader Williams College.

URI lost to a then-sluggish UMass team earlier this season. Since then, UMass has come to dominate Division One, winning over the University of New Hampshire, Northeastern University, and Yale University. If UMass wins this match, it will be in a first-place tie with Harvard University. These two teams will have a showdown at Harvard Friday night, with the Division One Championships this coming Sunday at Harvard.

"Practices have been going well," said UMass coach Al Morel. "We've been working on the basics in serving, serve reception, hitting, and blocking. We've also been working on our fast attack and a few extras for the championships."

Netwomen drop opener

By NANCY PARKS
Special to the Collegian

The UMass women's tennis team lost its first match to a tough Williams College Tuesday night at Williams. Every one of the women's singles players lost on route to a score of 5-4 with the exception of numbers 3 and 6, Beth Goldberg and Lynne O'Sullivan, respectively.

Coach John Beal felt that all his women played their best against Williams although they were up against three women that they had never played before.

Numbers two, three, and four of the Williams singles teams were not on the team last fall. All the other women that formerly held those positions had been moved up on the ladder leaving the UMass women with a disadvantage of never having played any of these three women before.

All three doubles teams played well winning all three matches with very strong and well-played out strategies. The number 2 team of Jean Roberts and Helen Najarian won straight sets of 6-0, 6-1.

Junior Jean Roberts is new to the team and according to Beal, she is a good player who has not played much over the years. With a lot of hard work and determination she has worked her way up to the number 2 position in doubles.

Saturday, the team is up against a very tough rival in the University of Connecticut. The UMass team lost badly last season to the Connecticut team, 6-3, seemingly not a bad score, the UMass team was dominated consistently throughout the match.

Barrows, Brown ice Gorillas, 19-15

By JIM DEGNIM
Collegian Staff

Tad Barrows scored three goals in a three-minute span in the third quarter yesterday as Brown University, ranked eleventh nationally and third in New England, erased a 10-7 UMass halftime lead and went on to a 19-15 men's lacrosse win over the Gorillas.

UMass, number nine in the nation and second in New England in the latest polls, held an 11-8 lead after attackman Jim Weller scored one of his five goals with 4:03 played in the third quarter, when Barrows began his assault.

The senior midfielder scored his second of six goals at 5:20 of the period. After another Bruin goal made it 11-10, Barrows scored a pair of goals just six seconds apart midway through the period to give his team a 12-11 lead. Then, seven seconds later, Bruin John Borzilleri scored after Barrows had won the ensuing face-off and started a fast break 13-11, Brown.

"Our goalie came up with the saves when he had to and theirs didn't," Brown coach Cliff Stevenson said. "That was the difference. I think the teams are pretty even." Brown goaltender Charlie Meister had 15 saves in the game.

UMass coach Dick Garber pulled freshman goaltender Dan Altschuler late in the third period and replaced him with sophmore Tom Curran.

Garver's Gorillas came back to tie the score with goals by Pat Downes and Dave Martin at 10:58 and 11:40 in the third quarter. Chris Corin assisted on both. Brown scored late in the period to take a 14-13 lead into the final quarter.

The Bruins scored two quick goals in the first two-and-a-half minutes of the fourth quarter for a 16-13 lead, and school was out. UMass was never closer than two goals after that.

UMass attackman Dave Martin falls as he checks Brown defenseman John Bowman. Martin had three goals in the 19-15 loss to Brown. (Staff photo by Rich Newman)

The Gorillas scored the game's first four goals (Mike Lavin, Weller, Skip Vosburgh and Peter Schmitz) before Brown struck at 6:16 and 6:38 to cut the lead to 4-2. UMass kept a two-goal advantage after one period, 6-4.

"We got off to a good start and I thought we were in good shape, but we couldn't sustain it," Garber said.

UMass built its lead to 8-5 on another Martin goal at 7:47 and after the Bruins had responded with two scores, Mike Lewis and Martin beat Brown goalie Charlie Meister during one man-up situations for a 10-7 halftime lead.

The loss, played before an estimated 800 fans at wind-swept Boyden Field, drops the UMass record to 4-2. Brown is now 5-2. Weller led UMass with five goals, Martin has three goals and an assist. Corin had five assists. Barrows, an All-American in 1979, has six goals and an assists. Angelo Lobosco had four goals.

"I don't know when we've given up 19 goals," Garber said. "They beat us to a lot of ground balls."

The most goals allowed by UMass in the last two season was 16 against Rutgers and Navy in 1979.

Altschuler stopped nine shots and Curran two. UMass scooped 78 ground balls to the Bruins' 70.

The Gorillas get a break in their schedule as they play host to Williams College Satuday at 2:00 p.m. before big games with Hofstra University, the University of New Hampshire (currently fourth in New England), and tenth-in-the-nation Army May 3.

Athletic tuition waivers granted

By FRANK PAPSADORE
Collegian Staff

The UMass Board of trustees recently granted 40 tuition waivers to be used by qualified applicants to the Amherst campus starting next fall.

Of the 40 awards, 12 waivers are to be divided evenly between men's and women's sports at UMass that do not already receive financial aid for their athletes.

The tuition waivers, called the Chancellor's Merit Award for Excellence, are available to athletes who are Massachusetts residents only. This means that they are worth approximately $750 a year for the next four years, as long as the athlete is still competing in the sport that he or she was awarded for.

Dr. David Bischoff, Dean of the UMass School of Physical Education, stated that the awards are a "wonderful opportunity" for some UMass teams to persuade candidates who might otherwise go elsewhere without the financial aid.

"Everyone here is terribly excited about the project," Bischoff said. "The awards will definitely help 'showcase' some of our sports programs like baseball, field hockey and lacrosse, where there is no scholarship money readily available at the moment."

Any UMass team, with the exception of men's football, women's gymnastics, and both men's and women's basketball, is in a position to bid for the use of the waivers. Twelve new awards will be given each year for the athletic department to distribute among these qualifying teams. This means that starting three years from now, there will be a total of 48 awards available to athletes every year. This will be a big boost to these sports probrams, according to UMass athletic director, Frank McInerny.

"These awards will enable us to strengthen some of our programs," McInerney said, "Tuition waivers make it possible for some fine athletes to attend UMass that would otherwise decide not to come."

Several of the UMass coaches whose teams qualify for the newly-awarded waivers were very happy about the future.

"We've already submitted names of some prospects," UMass baseball coach Dick Bergquist said. "But I'd still like to see more done.

"UMass should have better ways of attracting athletes." Bergquist added, "We should be able to do what our competition does. These awards are a little late, but I'm still very happy that we're finally getting them."

Elaine Marasco, UMass softball coach, said that the school should be able to do more things like this for athletics because of its size.

"This University could be a gold mine for women's athletics," Marasco commented, "It's exciting to think about the prospects of attracting one or two outstanding players next year. It will help us out a lot more in the future."

UMass men's track coach Ken O'Brien said that the new awards are a "big boom" for programs like his.

"It's a little too early to tell," O'Brien said, "but we've been in the ballgame with a few really good candidates, and hopefully this will sway one or two of them this way."

Pam Hixon coached women's lacrosse to a number-two national ranking along with her number-four ranked field hockey team last year without any scholarships.

"I think it's a very positive step," Hixon said. "I'm really excited. These tuition waivers are the only leverage we have without scholarships. I hope they prove to be contributive so maybe we can get more things like this at UMass in the future.

Ruggers fall to Lord Jeffs

By DONNA SULLIVAN
Collegian Staff

After a glorious win over MIT on Saturday, the UMass Rugby Football Club lost in a heartbreaker to Amherst College yesterday despite holding a substantial lead throughout most of the game. With about ten minutes left in the game Amherst scored the try that gave it the 15-18 win.

In the final minutes, the UMass ruggers seemed to be gaining momentum but the wind was against them and time ran out. UMass had the advantage throughout the first half but failed to capitalize enough to hold the Lord Jeffs when they switched sides and Amherst got the advantage.

UMass had an excellent first half, passing, kicking, and scoring at will. It gained control of a great majority of the scrums and capitalized on one early in the game. Mark Olbrych put the first tally on the board early in the first half after a scrummage just a few yards away from the end zone. UMass got control of the scrum ball and Olbrych brought it in in the midst of a crowd.

A drive that started from midfield saw Dave Brown score the try that gave the UMie ruggers an 8-0 lead. George Economou, Joe Lambert, Mark Vartabedian, Andy Middleton, and Eric Schafer passed backwards, the only legal way in rugby, until Brown, the final pass receiver scored the try. The passing was just one in a game filled with fancy, yet strong standard passing.

Amherst brought itself to two points away in just one drive by getting the try and the conversion kick afterwards, something Mass. failed to do in the entire game. Midway through the first half the Lord Jeffs scored their only try of the period after gaining control of a scrum ball in Mass. territory.

Dave Packard gave UMass an 11-8 lead when he kicked for three penalty points in the final minutes of the half.

Schafer dodged numerous Lord Jeff attackers carrying the ball into Amherst territory and passing to Lambert who made the score 15-6.

In the second game, a UMass squad composed of side D and E players defeated Amherst's side B, 18-0, despite the fierce winds and mud.

Sox survive Tiger scare, 10-9

BOSTON (AP) — Veteran Tony Perez had four hits, including a two-run homer and a two-run double, as the Boston Red Sox withstood a three-run Detroit ninth inning and outlasted the Tigers 10-9 Wednesday after a 66-minute rain delay in the top of the eighth.

Perez, signed as a free agent last November after 15 years in the National League, also walked to complete a perfect day as the Red Sox posted their third consecutive victory and handed Detroit its fifth consecutive loss.

Veteran Steve Renko, who bailed out rookie starter Bruce Hurst in the third inning after the Tigers scored five runs, allowed only one hit before the rain came with runners on first and second and two out in the Detroit eighth. After the delay, Tom Burgmeier replaced Renko and the Tigers picked up an unearned run on an error by third baseman Butch Hobson.

With two out in the bottom of the eighth, Perez singled and scored what proved to be the deciding run on Carl Yastrzemski's double, giving the Red Sox a 10-6 lead.

Burgmeier then survived a wild ninth to record his second save.

URI joins EAA

PROVIDENCE, R.I. (AP) — The University of Rhode Island Wednesday joined the Eastern Athletic Association, filling a hole created when two-time conference champion Villanova left to join the Big East Conference.

The Rams' new athletic status pleased URI basketball coach Jack Kraft, who called it "a tremendous step forward...a chance to develop some good rivalries between teams."

Kraft said URI now stands a better chance of winning tournament berths than it had as an independent.

The association, popularly called the Eastern Eight, competes in basketball, baseball, golf, cross country, tennis and swimming, Executive Director Leland Byrd said at a press conference Wednesday.

The association's members are Duquesne, George Washington, Rutgers, Massachusetts, Pittsburgh, St. Bonaventure, West Virginia and now URI.

Byrd said the addition of URI would bolster Eastern Eight's name in New England and spark more exposure. "Now we have two teams — Massachusetts and Rhode Island," he said.

The four-year-old Pittsburgh-based association has a televised game-of-the-week and a "clearly expressed commitment to continue quality in sport," Byrd said.

Collins fails in bid to scrap plan

State Reps OK education reorg

By MARC FAGELSON
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts House of Representatives voted early yesterday morning to approve the reorganization of the state's higher education system as proposed by the House Ways and Means Committee.

In an 82 to 65 vote, the representatives rejected an amendment by Rep. James Collins, D-Amherst, to strike the sections (59-65) that contained the reorganization plan, Ken Moore, a Student Center for Educational Research and Advocacy member said yesterday.

The legislation would phase-out the Boards of Trustees of state colleges and regional community colleges in Massachusetts. UMass would be one of three state universities not affected immediately by the legislation, Moore said.

"It's a plan to centralize higher education, but on one side there will be the Board of Regents, and on the other, the state's three universities; UMass, the University of Lowell and Southeastern University spinning off on their own tangents, he said.

Finnegan said the proposed reorganization will save the state $5 million, but Collins said it may not save anything. The Board of Regents would need to establish a regional bureaucracy and the state's administration fees could remain unchanged, Collins said.

The plan to reorganize must now be affirmed by the Senate Ways and Means Committee and the Senate before it reaches its final hurdle before adoption, the House-Senate Conference Committee, Moore said.

The Conference Committee, which contains three members from each Ways and Means Committee "basically decides the budget," Moore said. "But we're hoping the reorganization legislation will be killed in the Senate," he added.

The legislation to reorganize was implemented by the Ways and Means Committee as part of their recommendations for the state budget, Moore said. But their recommendation never reached the Education Committee, he added.

"When the committee system becomes meaningless," Collins said, "the legislative system becomes meaningless."

In other voting, the house apportioned an additional $6 million to be used by the state to pay counties for rental of court space, according to the Associated Press.

The AP also reported, "An attempt by Republican leader William G. Robinson of Melrose to increase local aid failed.

"The budget before us guarantees property taxes will increase," Robinson said.

Students, residents protest 'big business'

By SARAH HAMMAN
Collegian Staff

'Control Corporate Power' and 'Human Needs Before Profits' summarized the rallying cries of Big Business Day speakers at the Amherst Common yesterday afternoon.

Close to 200 area students and residents fittered into Amherst from the Western Massachusetts Electric Company Office on Triangle Street, the initial picket spot, to listen to five anti-corporate activists who are leading rallies against corporations in such cities as Cambridge and Washington DC.

Moderator and Sociologist Jan Dizard of Amherst College emphasized the need to democratize the economy, to take control from the corporations and return it to the community.

"Everyday in this country is a 'big business day.' The major corporations own and control the use and production of our major energy sources: coal, oil uranium, and now the sun," began Anna Gyorgy, author of No Nukes and a leader of the Franklin County Alternative Energy Coalition.

Americans face two problems: nuclear power as a substitute energy source, and the corporate structure's strangulation of non-unionized workers, Gyorgy said.

"What is going on? Even capitalist publications like Time, in last week's cover story 'Is Capitalism Working?', question the possible collapse of the American economic system," said Michael Best of the UMass Economic Department.

Best stressed the transferral of democratic institutions, which compose the American political structure, into the economic sphere, allowing legislators to recall economic decisions. The government and corporations' problem is a lack of austerity, Best added.

Best said that yesterday's rally showed that we are seeing the rebirth of student activism. "Many area students are on the edge of involvement," he said. Area rallies like this cause the corporations a moment's reflection, he added.

Steve Mann, an area businessman, said unions are losing members and are in sorry shape at this time. The corporations exist for one thing - profit - not workers. He warned of the corporate structure's state by state attempt to destroy the labor-union organization.

Supporters for yesterday's rally included the UMass Student Senate, Students Against the Draft and the Student Center for Educational Research and Advocacy.

House committee approves registration

By TERENCE HUNT
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — In an important victory for President Carter, the House Appropriations Committee yesterday resurrected his embattled plan for peacetime draft registration of young men.

By a three-vote margin, 26-23, the committee approved spending $13.3 million to start registering an estimated 4 million men, aged 19 and 20, at post offices throughout the country, beginning this summer.

Proposals to register women along with men, as Carter proposed, were shouted down twice without a recorded vote.

Carter's plan has been stalled in Congress since Feb. 27 when an appropriations subcommittee approved only enough money for a standby registration program that would not start until the president ordered mobilization in an emergency.

The subcommittee vote had been a sharp setback for the administration, and resulted in an intense lobbying effort by the White House and Pentagon to reverse the outcome.

The vote by the full committee nullified the subcommittee decision and cleared the way for a debate over registration on the House floor next week, probably Tuesday.

"I would be surprised if it were defeated," House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill, D-Mass., told reporters.

He said a White House survey shows 206 congressmen supporting registration, 86 opposed and the remainder of the 435 members undecided.

The committee's vote marked the first victory in Congress on registration for the administration.

Carter announced his registration program in his Jan. 23 State of the Union address, calling it a sign of U.S. strength and resolve to protect American interests after the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan.

There was widespread division among Republicans and Democrats on whether to support registration. Eight Republicans joined 18 Democrats in voting for registration, while nine GOP members and 14 Democrats voted against it.

Registration was stalled for seven weeks because of a spending freeze imposed when federal outlays exceeded the budget ceiling set by Congress for 1980.

§To get around that freeze, the resolution approved by the committee would transfer $13.3 million to Selective Service from funds already appropriated for an Air Force manpower account.

Meanwhile, a Selective Service spokeswoman said that if Congress approves a bill to register young men for the draft, 19-and 20-year-olds will begin signing up during the last two weeks in June.

Joan Lamb said that young men born in 1960 and 1961 will be asked to report to their local post office to fill out registration forms which tell the government their name, address, date of birth and social security number.

Should Congress authorize a draft, a lottery based on birthdays would be held to determine what order the young men would be drafted.

Area reps divided

WASHINGTON (AP) — Four New England Congressmen on the House Appropriations Committee divided yesterday in the 26-23 roll call vote by which the committee approved spending $13.3 million to start draft registration of young men.

Voting for registration were Reps. Edward Boland, D-Mass., and Robert Giaimo, D-Conn.

Voting againt registration were Reps. Silvio Conte, R-Mass., and Joseph Early, D-Mass.

Carter puts heat on Iran, Portugal joins in sanctions

By The Associated Press

President Carter turned the U.S. economic vise on Iran a little tighter yesterday, and got a boost from West Europeans. Portugal banned all trade with Iran, and the European Parliament urged the nine Common Market nations to consider breaking diplomatic ties with the revolutionary regime in Tehran.

At a Washington news conference, Carter warned that if non-military steps do not lead to the release of the 50 U.S. Embassy hostages in Tehran, "the next step will be military action."

He announced he was banning financial transactions with Iran by anyone in the United States, prohibiting most American travel to Iran, ordering payment of reparations to families of the 50 hostages from frozen Iranian assets, and ordering U.S.-made arms on order by Iran to be made available to U.S armed forces instead.

Earlier yesterday, Iranian revolutionary leader Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini dismissed the American sanctions as an "empty drum," and President Abolhassan Bani-Sadr insisted Iran was "mostly self-sufficient" and would not be endangered by a broad trade embargo.

But Bani-Sadr nonetheless threatened anew to cut off Iranian oil to nations that join in the U.S. sanctions.

It appeared that Portugal, for one, had taken the punch out of the Iranian threat by itself suspending Iranian oil imports.

In announcing the new measures, Carter said he might next order a ban on shipments of U.S. food and drugs to Iran.

Traffic in those items is already minimal, however. Iranian purchases of U.S. food had declined sharply since the antishah revolution succeeded 14 months ago, and the American longshoremen's union had cut off whatever other food shipments there were. But U.S. officials indicated that a formal export ban would help establish an example for U.S. allies to follow.

The surprise announcement in Lisbon indicated Carter had found at least some solid support in Western Europe.

After a Cabinet meeting, the government of Premier Francisco sa Carneiro announced it was prohibiting all Iranian imports and Portguese exports to Iran. It meant oil-poor Portugal would be cutting off one of its chief sources of petroleum. In the third quarter of 1979, it received 21 percent of its oil from Iran.

In 1978, Portugal imported $131 million worth of Iranian oil, while exporting $2.7 million in goods to Iran.

Portugal is a member of the NATO alliance but not of the European Common Market. It nevertheless joined the nine Common Market governments last week in instructing its Tehran ambassador to "demand" that the Iranians free the U.S. Embassy hostages.

Students work for Anderson third party bid

JOHN ANDERSON

By ELLEN DAVIS
Collegian Staff

A group of UMass students are helping lead a statewide drive to get Republican presidential candidate John Anderson on the Massachusetts ballot in November as an Independent.

The group is part of a nationwide exploratory committee authorized by Anderson last week. The purpose of the committee is to allow Anderson to get on the ballot in as many states as possible if he decides to make a bid as an Independent, according to UMass Senior Peter Torkildsen, who is serving as Western Massachusetts Coordinator.

Besides Massachusetts, the committee is focusing its efforts in Michigan and New Jersey, Torkildsen said.

To get Anderson on the ballot as an Independent in Massachusetts, the group must get the signatures of 39,245 registered voters by May 6.

To do this, about 30 UMass students will begin working in the local towns of Amherst, Greenfield, Pittsfield, Holyoke and Springfield this weekend. They expect to start collecting signatures at UMass Tuesday, Torkildsen said.

In addition, students from Harvard, Boston College, the University of Lowell, and Merrimack College will be collecting signatures in the Boston area. The group is aiming to get 80,000 signatures to make sure they have enough valid ones, Torkildsen said.

The petitions the students will be collecting signatures on list the name of Harvard Business School Professor George Cabot Lodge as the Vice-Presidential candidate. Lodge, a Republican, ran against Edward Kennedy for the Senate in 1968.

Also on the ballot are the names of 14 people who will serve as electors for Anderson from the state. Of these, at least two will be UMass students, Torkildsen said.

Torkildsen said he feels that if the group can get Anderson's name on the Massachusetts ballot in November, there is a good chance he could win the state. As for Anderson's chances nationwide, he noted that and ABC-Harris survey published in the Boston Globe yesterday showed that Anderson currently has more support (22 percent) than any other third party candidate in history. The survey had Ronald Reagan and President Carter tied at 38 percent if Anderson ran as an Independent.

Torkildsen said he feels there is a good chance that Anderson will make an independent bid for the presidency. He said, however, that he may not announce immediately.

"It would be to his advantage to run as a Republican in a few more primaries to get media exposure and also collect Federal matching funds," he said.

Torkildsen conceded that at this point, Anderson has almost no chance of winning the Republican nomination.

Southwest voters go to the polls, Mazzola, Mangan elected presidents

By ED LEVINE
Collegian Staff

The largest number of students ever to vote in an election in the Southwest Residential Area chose Ruth Mazzola and Kevin Mangan to serve as their presidents next year.

Mazzola and Mangan received 648 of the total 1406 votes cast. Bob Ross and Bob Jacobson finished second with 413 votes and Jack Boyd received 312 votes. Write-ins, blanks and voids accounted for 33 votes.

"I think it's great," Mazzola said. "It's the most votes that have been cast in a long time, the most participation ever seen in Southwest."

Mazzola said her goals for next year include the establishment of more student-run dormitories, increased participation in the Southwest Assembly, more programming in the dormitories and throughout Southwest, and the continued building of resources available to students in the area.

Mangan was also elated by his victory.

"We would like to thank the Students of Southwest and our campaign help," Mangan said. "We'd like to see Southwest grow as a community and we will work with the students as much as possible."

Peter DeGrandis and Steven Judge were elected treasurers. They were unopposed for the office.

In the race for Communications Coordinator, conducted by write-in votes, Tera Friedrichs won with 32 write-in votes.

A referendum to determine whether Southwest residents prefer SWA to fund programming or academics, showed the majority favor programming by a vote of 843 to 213.

"I think Kevin and Ruth are highly qualified and would do a fine job succeeding myself and Scott (Shuster)," said current SWA co-president Bruce Levy. "I look forward to working with them on the many serious issues that affect Southwest residents.

Mazzola, who is the current SWA vice-president, is a freshwoman education major from Newton who lives in Moorer House. Mangan, from Somerville, is a sophomore and a Resident Assistant on the 6th floor of Washington. Mangan is also the current SWA treasurer.

Spring concert ticket sales lag

By ED LEVINE
Collegian Staff

UMass students and employees may now purchase up to four guest tickets for this year's Spring Concert, scheduled for May 10 in Alumni Stadium.

If ticket sales for the show do not improve by next Wednesday, Five College students may also be allowed to purchase tickets, Union Program Council Promotion Director Darlene Lorkiewica said yesterday.

Lorkiewicz said only 4,000 out of a possible 14,000 tickets have been sold for the show, and more tickets need to be sold to finance the production.

Tickets are being sold for $15 each at the Fine Arts Center Box Office and students must present a current UMass identification to purchase the tickets, Lorkiewicz said.

Student tickets will be distributed free of charge to fee-paying undergraduates beginning Tuesday April 22 at Hampden Commons in Southwest.

The list of students who have been chosen at random to receive guest passes for the concert weekend is available and has been posted in dormitories and at the Fine Arts Center Box Office, according to Ken Burnham of the Office of Residential Life.

A system for distributing the passes and of allowing transfer of the passes within the dormitories will be worked out "by the middle of next week," Burnham said.

New library hours

UMass Library Director Richard Talbot announced yesterday the recently re-opened UMass library tower will temporarily extend its present hours beginning Tuesday, April 22 through Thursday, May 1. These hours will be:

Monday-Thursday 8 a.m. -12 midnight.
Friday 8 a.m.-10 p.m.
Saturday 10 a.m.-6 p.m.
Sunday 10 a.m.-12 midnight.

On Friday, May 2, both libraries will adopt the "extended hours" schedule previously announced for the Goodell library. From Friday, May 2, through Tuesday, May 20, these hours will be:

Monday-Friday 8 a.m.-12 midnight.
Saturday-Sunday 10 a.m.-12 midnight.

Students fast for Cambodian relief program

About 2,375 students skipped dinner at the UMass Dining Commons last night and raised about $2,200 for Cambodian refugees.

Rev. Pete Sabey of the United Christian Foundation and UMass Coordinator for OXFAM, the international relief organization, said the students fasted to raise money for OXFAM's Cambodian relief effort.

"We're kind of disappointed," Sabey said. "We set a goal of $1 per student. The response was about half of last semester's."

Sabey said he encountered substantial opposition from students when he approached them about the idea this week.

"I think it reflects selfish insensitivity on the part of people who don't know what it's like to be hungry," he said.

In addition, about $400 in cash contributions were received, Sabey said. The money collected will be sent to OXFAM-America in Boston, by both the UCF and Food Services.

Sabey also said OXFAM is still collecting money and contributions can be sent to him at UCF in the Student Union Building.

Attorneys move to oust minority worker

Yesterday, three of the attorneys at Student Legal Services asked for the resignation, by April 23, of Delores Bushway as Administrative Coordinator. She was informed that if it was not submitted they would not recommend her for rehiring for the next year.

Ms. Bushway, a Native American and the only minority person on staff in Legal Services, has worked there since August of 1978.

The resignation request came as a surprise since the managing attorney, Steven Baumohl, had, just a week ago, promised to extend her contract for another year. She was asked to resign yesterday by Mr. Baumohl, along with Attorney's DiMare and Eckstein.

Baumohl has worked at Legal Services for nearly three years. The other attorneys were hired five months ago.

Ms. Bushway has worked for Legal Services for almost two years, a time in which the office itself was struggling to get a clear organizational direction.

The office has had a number of significant successes in defense of student rights and had recently secured substantial increases in attorney salaries, through the SGA budgets committee.

According to the December 19, 1979 office report, prepared by Managing Attorney Baumohl, the "office is finally fully staffed with energetic and experienced attorneys. The office morale is at an all time high. The work of the office is growing in both quantity and quality. The Legal Services Office will be an active and productive champion of student legal rights for next year and beyond."

The office is staffed by thirteen paralegals, all white, four attorneys, all white, a secretary and the administrative coordinator. If Ms. Bushway is pushed out there will be no minorities at all on the Legal Services staff.

The recent events here and at UMass Boston over minority hiring and representation makes these developments at Legal Services very distressing.

In addition to her administrative duties, Ms. Bushway has assumed the task of working as a divorce, paralegal advisor as well as preparing, at the Attorney's advice, to take accounting and other courses to improve her office skills.

The moves by the attorneys against Ms. Bushway are even more distressing since the Everywoman's Center, as well, has had problems that resulted in the resignations of the only three minority women in the center.

It is still not clear at this point the real motivation behind these developments, but it can't help but raise serious concerns about the state of minority employees here at UMass, Amherst.

After discussion with a number of minorities who worked with Ms. Bushway it is clear that they see her loss as an additional blow to the Third World Community's interest.

Too few blacks in industry

BOSTON — Most Massachusetts computer firms employ a far lower percentage of blacks than is found in the general work force, according to federal figures released Wednesday by a coalition of advocacy groups.

However, the same numbers indicate that Hispanic people and other minorities are generally well represented in the industry. Women workers tend to be relegated to traditional roles, such as clerical jobs, the data indicated.

The statistics, obtained from the Office of Federal Contract Compliance through the Freedom of Information law, were issued by the National Center for Jobs and Justice and Low Income Planning Aid.

The groups credited Honeywell and Digital, each with 10 plants apiece in Massachusetts, with hiring blacks. With blacks constituting 3.2 percent of the statewide labor force, Digital has 7.3 percent black representation and Honeywell 5.7 percent.

However, 44 other high technology companies checked by the coalition reproted that, on average, their labor forces were only 1.7 percent black.

Hispanic people make up 0.9 percent of the statewide workforce but 1.8 percent of the computer industry.

Other minorities, primarily Asians, are an 0.7 perecent bloc statewide but a 1.5 percent protion of the industry.

Women, who are 43 percent of the statewide labor force, hold 33 percent of the the high tech jobs, according to the federal data.

The coalition said it was drawing attention to the employment patterns because of Gov Edward J. King's plan to grant additional tax incentives to the high tech industry. Under a "Bay State Project" the administration announced Tuesday.

'Lucky Strikes Legacy'

By BOBBY DAVIS
Black Affairs Staff

On Friday April 18, the Third World Theater Series presents "Lucky Strikes Legacy", an original area production.

"Lucky Strikes...", written by Freida Jones and directed by Lauren Harrington is a choreopoem about Black music and culture.

The setting is based in Harlem. The time periods range from the late forties/early fifties to the present.

Freida with poetry and theatre, has captured the Black musical experience with its many beautiful and creative issues. She has quite successfully captured the painful reality of neglect and disrespect to which the music and the musicians have been subjected.

The actors and actresses have been diligently working for the past three weeks to present what can be considered the workings of a fine presentation.

The show will be running for six nights (two weekends) starting April 18,19,20 and continuing on April 25, 26, 27 at Hampden Theatre in Southwest Residential area. All performances will begin at 8:00. Admission is $2.00 for students and $3.00 for the general public. Everyone is stongly encouraged to attend.

Patriot's Day: For Whom?

What is happening on April 21st? A panel discussion and community seminar on "Black Youth, Politics and the 1980's" and Patriot's Day. Now who's holiday is Patriot's Day?

Fredrick Douglass stated in his famous Fourth of July speech that black people have no reason to celebrate American independence. Just as black people have no reason celebrating American independence, they also have no reason celebrating Patriot's Day. The reasons are simple. As much as the black man has struggled continuously in America he still hasn't been recognized for the things he has accomplished.

In the Revolutionary War, 5,000 blacks fought in battle but the black man hasn't been recognized for that. The Continental Army refused black admission until they saw the British offering freedom for fighting. In World War I, 100,000 blacks answered the call for service. Then in 1917, 15,000 blacks were protesting the lynchings in America with placards that read "Mr. President, why not make America safe for Democracy?"

A prime example of America ignoring the black man's contribution was the incident of Dr. Charles Drew. Dr. Drew's blood bank system was a critical contribution to World War II; it saved thousands of lives and it played a major role in the advancement of medicine. Yet on April 1st, 1950 American Racism murdered Dr. Drew. Dr. Drew was in a car accident and was brought to a hospital. The closest hospital happened to be a white one. They did not admit Dr. Drew because he was black man. Dr. Drew was in need of blood to stay alive and when he was being rushed to a black hospital, he bled to death. That shows how America feels about Patriotism for the black man.

Youth unemployment for back youths is substanially high; leaving many black youths with the only alternative being the Armed Force. Also many whites are leaving the urban areas like New York City and Chicago. So we now see education in the city diminishing for the black youth. This is harmful to the future of black people in America.

Now before black people start celebrating Patriot's Day they better find out what they are celebrating. A black person celebrating Patriot's Day is like a white man celebrating Black Solidarity Day.

On April 21, 1980 at 4:00 p.m. there will be a panel discussion and community seminar on "Black Youth, Politics and the 1980's" The presentations will be by Mel King (Black Youth in the Decade of the 80's), Bill Strickland (Independent Black Politics), and Tony Crayton (From the Campus to the Community). It will be held in the Malcolm X Center, Southwest Campus. It is essential for black people to be aware of what is happening to the black youths in America and what the future for black people will be.

Under the brilliant floodlights of the Rufaro soccer stadium, the British Union Jack, first planted in the territory nine decades ago at the height of Victorian expansion, was ceremoniously lowered for the last time.

In its place, Comrade Kambeu, a former black nationalist guerrilla, raised the new Zimbabwean flag, a multi-colored banner representing the land's races and riches.

Wild cheers erupted at midnight, 5 p.m. EST, from the 40,000 mainly black guests at the stadium. Four presidents, seven prime ministers and envoys from some 100 countries were also on hand.

Prince Charles of Britain handed over power — in the form of a scrolled act of the British Parliament granting independence — to the titular president of the southern African country, Canaan Banana.

Banana, as constitutional head of state, then swore in Robert Mugabe as prime minister.

Mugabe, the former black guerrilla chief who is now Zimbabwe's top political leader, paid tribute to British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher in replying to a pledge of aid to Zimbabwe read by British Foreign Secretary Lord Carrington.

University may withdraw student check bouncers

By MICHAEL FOLEY
Collegian Staff

The University administration has obtained the right to academically withdraw students from the University for bouncing bad checks, UMass Board of Governor's Treasurer Larry Ruth said last night.

The policy is presently in effect, and has been for two weeks now, Campus Center Director William Harris said at the BOG meeting last night.

The check cashing facility on the first floor of the campus center has collected $5,000 in bad checks, Harris said. In the two weeks since the University has enforced the new measure, $2,000 has been recovered by the Campus Center, he said.

Asked why the University had failed to announced the policy, Harris said, "No one has taken the responsibility. It only concerns those who bounce checks."

According to the policy, the University will notify students guilty of bouncing checks, and allow them two weeks to pay the balance owed. If, at the end of two weeks, the balance is not returned to the University, the Registrar will be notified by the administration to withdraw the student from the University.

According to Ruth, students who are withdrawn from the University for bouncing bad checks, are not eligible to be on the UMass payroll, and will not be allowed to sign up for courses.

In other action last night, Chairman Dave O'Malley related a letter which complained of "totally naked" women painted on two pinball machines in the Campus Center.

punk grok drama at Thorne's

By DAVID AMBOS
Collegian Staff

Some acquaintances wondered if "De Fiance Suction", playing at Thorne's Market in Northampton, was a new wave band. After seeing it I can answer emphatically yes. Or rather No Theater, the creator/producers of "De Fiance Suction", is a progressive grok group, and their play is a devolution drama.

Tuning in on a bleack vision of the future, the play combines elements of absurdist theater, novels by Aldous Huxley and Anthony Burgess, and Heavy Metal-style cartoon staging in its' portrayal of a sad new world; devastated and dehumanized, peopled by robotic maintenance men and sterile stewardesses who live, like termites, in the decaying walls of a society which they have helped to doom. All is laboratory-white in this world; everyone wears numbers, and all don uniforms which make them indistinguishable from each other.

Despite its monotonous familiarity, they cannot understand or relate to their environment. Nor can they communicate with each other, such is their mental dissolution. And, because of the day by day sapping of their will and anger (hence the title "De Fiance Suction") they lack the means to escape, fight back, or try to cure their terminal world.

Though it's not indicated by the above, the play is comic. The humor is based less on commedia dell'arte than Devo, more on the B-52s than Bernard Shaw.

The No Theater company, led by writer/director Roy Faudree, has done a fine, frightening job of extrapolation with this production.

Smoking for your life

BILL HALLISEY

What's all this I hear about smoking being bad for your health? I've been smoking for ten years and I've never felt better.

Tobacco (N. Tobacum Nicotiana), the active ingredient in cigarettes, has beneficial medicinal uses. Millions of Americans depend on cigarettes to keep fit. But overzealous scientists and doctors continue to bad mouth the plant by distorting the facts.

First it was cancer. Cigarettes cause cancer they said. Now, come to find out, Fresca causes cancer, asbestos causes cancer, insulation, drinking water, subway stations—everything causes cancer. Why single out cigarettes?

Bronchitis, emphysema, heart disease, and bad breath are always attributed to smoking. I suppose that's one way to simplify the medical profession, but don't let simplicity fool you. It's a crop of lies.

Thousands of masochists don sneakers and run themselves into exhaustion every day. They come back short of breath and hearts pounding. Why? It's good for them, they say.

I don't have time to run, so instead I smoke. Cigarette smoking leaves me permanently out of breath while increasing my heart rate to aid circulation. Smoking is better than running because you can read, write, and watch TV at the same time. It gives you the time to do the things you really want to do, keeping you in tip top condition all the while.

Many retired athletes take up the habit to stay healthy. The late Jesse Owens worked out with a pack a day until the day he died.

I began to suspect that cigarettes could be beneficial many years ago when I had a physical examination. The doctor held a portion of my anatomy and asked me to cough. I coughed. "Good," he said. "Hmm," thought I, "coughing is good.

After careful observation, I realized that coughing was indeed healthy. Whenever I had a cold, it would start with a sore throat and runny nose. The agony would continue for several days. After two nights of fitful coughing, I began to feel better—never failed.

I found by smoking more, one tends to cough more often. Coughing rids the lungs of unwanted germs and mucous. If we didn't cough, all that stuff would just sit there and promote disease and clogged breathing passages. People who don't smoke have to go out and buy an expectorant when they want to unclog. Smokers unclog perpetually.

People with a watchful eye on their figure should consider taking up the habit. It lessens the appetite, making it easier for you to say no to that chocolate cake. It keeps you slim and trim. I figure by the time I reach a pack a day I'll be at my base weight.

'We only get one channel'

BRIAN FITZMAURICE

Once in a while? What the hell does that mean? I can't think of one "once in a while." Maybe once every ten seconds, once in a life time, but "once in a while?" What about "as a matter of fact?," "What is this?," or "I see what your saying?" Does he know something I don't? What about "they," or "them?" I've found you never see or get to "they;" "they" are always one step further. "Them" is another story. "Them" I've met, you can point to "them." Sometimes people point to "they," but it's always a building or in no particular direction. Like "like," or "wicked" or "fucking," for that matter. How come there's no slang for cursing?

Books are fun little closets we crawl in, the only problem is, people know where we are. "Fools die," that's what I have pasted over the TV in our house. We only get one channel but it comes in real clear. TV—is that a disease? I went to a benefit for it the other day, to raise money. I'd never raised money before. So it goes. I mean, so I went. But we had those heat up dinners, I forget what you call them. I tried calling but the line was busy. The interesting thing about campus, is you don't have to go anywhere, click, click.

Parachuting can be fun. But why jump out of a perfectly good airplane? I would. But I haven't. But I'm going to. Aren't you? What does it mean if you have a parachute hanging from your ceiling? Are we talking about jumping out of a plane or aren't we? What the hell is plain? Plane and simple! Why is it the simple things seem so intricate, and the plain ones... Complexity is simple minded wizardry. It's all quite simple, so they say, but we've already covered that.

What does it all mean? That's a perspective, but I'd rather think of it as nice. Aren't you? OK, let's be obscure: Between sneakers and shoes, which is more profitable? Run faster, jump higher! Builds strong bodies twelve ways! It's only! Sale! Discount! Once in a life time! Bargains! Bargains! Bargains! Rebate! Now that has negative undertones. Rebate..mmmmmmmm.... But they (a ohhh) give you money, isn't that strange? Pay to buy, buy to get paid. Is that like getting weighed? Getting paid, that is.

Ahhh, foam rubber "I must be in America," one check said to the other. Cigarettes are funny little creatures that just lay around 'til you burn their heads. Then they smoke their brains out, getting right down to the fibers of the matter, and quickly become ashes. "Excuse me do you have a light?" I handed him my eveready charged flashlight. I knew it worked, but he didn't use it and gave it back. Story of my life. That's interesting but we'll let it pass. Andover, and over, and over. Do you know there is a Springfield in almost every state in the country? What does that mean? I think it might be an underplot to promote something. Don't you? I do. Ya think? Ya know? Hi Ya, How you doing? He said "fine" and continued. If nobody ever said anything ever again, how many would stop talking? I for one am not! Aren't you?

Letters

Lighting forum

To the Editor:

Although Tuesday's lighting rally is over, there are still important issues that must be addressed. Clearly, the students gained a political victory. The power of organized students forced the Chancellor to address the issue of lighting in an open letter to the Collegian on Tuesday morning. The sheer strength of organized students was so apparent that members of the administration felt it necessary to barricade themselves inside Whitmore. All entrances were chained shut; armed guards patrolled the entire building.

The chancellor wants students to believe that his proposal adequately addresses the issues surrounding the lighting campaign. However, he has failed to respond to the following needs:

1. Although his "Tuesday" plan outlines lighting for several areas of campus, the lighting survey done in early 1979 suggests another 25 areas in need of improved lighting.

2. Education on the issues of violence has consistently been excluded from the Chancellor's proposals.

3. Students have not been involved in the decision making processes which determine policies on lighting.

Because Chancellor Koffler was unwilling to address those concerns on Tuesday, we have invited him and all interested students to attend an OPEN FORUM on TUESDAY APRIL 22 at 4 pm in CC 101. This will be an opportunity for students to have their questions answered. We hope to see everyone there.

Saved or paved

To the Editor:

In this period of Save the Whale movements, Save the Seal movements, Anti-Nuclear movements, and "lets make the world a better place to live" movements, it would be nice to see some of us practice what we preach and start by saving the grass. The lawns all over campus have become in many instances mud holes. The lawn in back of the campus pond is a good example. It would be really terrific if we students could keep to the paved paths. I realize that many of them are placed awkwardly; however, if the treading on the grass persists eventually it will all be replaced by asphalt, solving the parking problem but not leaving much room for frisbee.

Everyone screams when the Campus Tree Crew cuts down a tree. Scream a little when someone walks on the grass. Ecology and environmental protection should not be a matter of convenience.

Not Reagan, not Carter,...

To the Editor:

I am writing this letter in response to Bill Hallisey's editorial of 4/4. I agree whole-heartedly with Mr. Hallisey concerning Ronald Reagan's incompetence as a presidential candidate. I only wish more people would realize that Mr. Reagan is living in decades past and that catastrophe will not be a powerful enough word to use if he defeats President Carter in November's election.

Don't get me wrong, I don't want it to sound like I'm supporting Carter or anything crazy like that. I disagree with him on his handling of the economy, the Iran and Afghanistan situations and his re-election strategy (if he has one). I would like to make it known, however, that I do support a viable candidate for president, and that candidate is Rep. John Anderson of Illinois.

It seems that Mr. Hallisey has resigned himself to the fact that the November contest will boil down to a Carter-Reagan face-off, but need this be the case? Granted, a third-party candidate has never been voted into the White House in the long history of our nation, but isn't there a first time for everything? In my mind, John Anderson is the one candidate left in the race who represents strong opinions on important issues which are (for the most part) inarguable, and who consistently stands behind his call for the restraint and sacrifice of the American people in an attempt to save energy and reduce our dependence on foreign oil.

I know, right now you're saying to yourself, "How can this guy expect to win by asking Americans to be intelligent, or by asking your average lazy citizen to get up off his butt and walk that one mile to work instead of driving?" Well, the answer lies in the willingness of the electorate to make sacrifices, and more importantly, it lies in the shaky campaign platforms of the frontrunners, President Carter and Ronald Reagan.

All I ask is that you stop and think for a second; since when have Carter or Reagan asked for anything from you in their campaigns, besides support? Do you really think things are going to be so great when one of these guys gets elected that they won't ask you for anything in the way of sacrifices? John Anderson holds nothing back in this way; his is as honest a campaign as can be found in this year's presidential race.

Well, Mr. Hallisey, at least you realize the failings of both Carter and Reagan, but as for this "Anderson person," I won't give up until I'm 100 percent certain that my candidate can't win.

Mettawampe, former legend no longer is 'guiding spirit'

By AMY HASBROUCK
Special to the Collegian

Once, the bronze sculptured statue of the Indian Mettawampe stood alone as the guiding spirit of the University of Massachusetts.

Now, he simply stands alone.

Thirty years ago, because of a last minute discovery of some extra funds, the Class of 1950 decided to change the gift it would give to the University. The class asked Randolph Johnston, a sculptor from Smith College, to make a statue of the guiding spirit of the University. He did.

That December, "Mettawampe" was mounted on a rock on the east side of Old Chapel, at a cost of nearly $1,500. During the dedication, one administrator said the statue would "look forever toward the wigwams and teepees of the Massachusetts Redmen, both braves and squaws."

The statue was later moved.

Thirty years ago, they used to have a football rallies on Friday, with the spirit of Mettawampe as the central theme. According to Dean of Students William Field, after the band, football team and students were assembled an "Indian" would run through the crowd, and then light the bonfire.

Mettawampe himself does not have much of an exciting legend. His tribe lived, for a while at least, in the Sunderland area, and held several large tracts of land there. They eventually sold the land to the white settlers, and moved on as most students do after their stay here.

As a remembrance of the role Mettawampe's legend had in the tradition of the University, in 1948, shortly after UMass became a university, the athletic teams changed their name to the UMass Redmen. In 1972, however, the team name was changed to the Minutemen in response to outcries from Indian groups. The Indians had protested that the name Redmen was demeaning.

MORE ABOUT V.I.R.U.S.

With V.I.R.U.S. many students get a better chance of having a single, or more living space. At the same time, your participation will help hold down the average cost for dormitory housing. How do you participate in V.I.R.U.S. next semester?

SINGLE ROOM—If you will be living in a single room next semester you have to fill out the V.I.R.U.S. aplication form, then return it to The Housing Assignment Office. You must sign-up just before room-choosing. Next semester you will be billed and additional $50.00 for your single room.

DOUBLE SINGLE—If you do not have a roomate after the 5th week of the semester, you can apply. You must fill out the request form at the beginning of the semester. In Mid-October you will be billed an additional $75.00 for your double-single room.

TRIPLE DOUBLE—Two persons can also live in a triple-double room after the fifth week of the semester. You must fill out the request in Mid-September and each student will be billed an additional $25.00 to guarantee that no other student will be assigned to your room for the remainder of the semester.

SPECIAL NOTE: Persons obtaining a single, double-single, or triple-double room after the fifth week of the semester will be billed on a prorated basis. For more information about V.I.R.U.S. contact The Housing Assignment Office, 235 Whitnore. (545-2100).

"Back in 1951, everybody was singing songs to Mettawampe, but it gradually disappeared," Field said. He believes there is little or no chance of reviving that spirit. He explained that because the school was much smaller then, (3,500 students total) it is not likely that UMass could ever recapture that spirit of unity, the same spirit that goes along with freshman hazings and football rallies.

This loss of spirit can be reflected in some of the abuses that the statue has endured. Exactly one year after it was mounted, the statue was taken down, and thrown in the Campus Pond, which caused its musket to snap off. The sculptured bronze has been painted many times, and, more recently, it had fingernail and toenail polish and bright red lipstick applied to it.

Trackmen to BC

By KENNETH D. ROLT
Collegian Staff

The UMass men's track team will journey to Boston College for the B.C. Relays tomorrow at 10:00 a.m.

Rick Walls and Steve MacDougall will compete in the 5000 meter run, both of whom ran super fast 1500's at the UMass Relays last weekend.

Mike Doiron and Paul Beaulieu will run the 1500 meter event, and Rick Doiron will anchor the distance medley relay from MacCougall, Beaulieu and Pual King.

Hoping to stay undefeated this year, John Wright will lead King, John Rasku and Greg Mader in the 110 high hurdles.

The Minutemen will also run Wright, Bill DeVarney, Rick Cady and Rick Trunfio in the 440 and 880 relays.

The majority of the meet will be tomorrow while today and yesterday featured the decathalon and distance events.

Mittmen eye EAA tourney

By DAVE BRADLEY
Collegian Staff

UMass pitching ace Mark Brown puts his two-game winning streak on the line today when he faces George Washington University in the opening game of the Eastern Athletic Association tournament in Hershey, Pennsylvania.

Brown, UMass' hottest starter with two consecutive shutouts (2-3, 2.73 ERA), will be hurling against last year's tourney winner. Also playing in the double elimination tournament are Rutgers University (4-5), West Virginia University (4-8-2) and Duquesne University (4-1).

George Washington, besides winning last year's Eastern Eight title, won the Eastern Collegiate Athletic Conference Southern Regionals and went on to the national playoffs where it was eliminated in three games. UMass coach Dick Bergquist feels GW will be the favorite in the 1980 Eastern Eight contest, but the Colonials have lost six starters from last year's roster and their 6-12 record reflects the difficulty they've had adjusting.

GW will start Frank Frager (4-0, 3.95 ERA) against the Minutemen in hopes that he can snap a four-game losing streak the Colonials are in. GW has let up 32 runs in its last four contests.

The importance of this tournament is not lost on Bergquist. Although the winner of the tournament is given "no post season guarantee," Bergquist said, a good record along with a tourney title could "look good for an at large berth in the NCAA. It's more than just a game," he added.

While UMass plays GW, West Virginia will play Rutgers on another field. Duquesne has a bye in the first game.

UMass looks like it has the best pitching staff in the tourney while W. Virginia, with its team ERA of 6.60 appears to be toward the worst. West Virginia boasts the best hitter in the nation in Ron Pizatella, who has a .524 average with four home runs and 16 runs batted in.

'Ground floor, please'

If you're afraid of heights, if you're afraid of flying or if just don't have nerves of steel then don't try this. The UMass Sky Diving Club put on a demonstration of parachuting skills high above the campus yesterday. These members first prepare to leave the plane, start their descent, then begin to disappear from sight towards the Administration building. They landed in the Hagis Mall area between Whitmore and the School of Business Administration.

Gazelles drop Williams

By MAUREEN SULLIVAN
Collegian Staff

The UMass women's lacrosse team continued its dominance over its opponents with a 24-5 thrashing of Williams College yesterday at Williamstown.

The Gazelles, who beat the Ephwomen in a closely-played 13-10 contest last year, roared ahead to a 20-1 lead by the end of the first half, thanks to "a total team effort", according to Pam Hixon.

"It was incredible," Hixon said, "the team played really well. We managed to make some defensive changes in the second half so that some palyers get some flexibility. Williams got four goals in the second half because of these changes, but I thought they were worth it, especially with Harvard coming up."

Leading the UMass effort was Whitney Thayer with six goals and one assist. Cari Nickerson scored five times and assisted in three others, Lynn Herbert and Julie McHugh tallied four goals each, Maria Minicucci and Holly Jennings had two each, and Laura O'Neil scored one goal.

The Gazelles meet Harvard University at Cambridge tomorrow. In the latest New England Coaches' poll, UMass was the number one team, while Harvard, with a 5-4 record, came in fourth. Last year, the lady Crimson came away from UMass with a 12-8 loss.

"Harvard will be our most serious test to date," Hixon said.

The JV Gazelles also left Williams winning, by a score of 10-3. This victory lifts their record to 3-1, with their next game against Harvard University this Saturday after the varsity match.

Spikers win, crush URI

Both the varsity and junior varsity of the UMass men's volleyball team chaulked up wins in its home finale of the season at NOPE gym last night. The JVs downed Amherst College 15-8, 15-13, while the varsity handled the University of Rhode Island easily 15-7, 15-7, 15-4.

The junior varsity will host a quadri-match against Williams College, Middlebury College and Dartmouth College Saturday. These matches will determine if UMass can enter the playoffs of the New England Collegiate Volleyball League for Division Two.

The varsity will travel to Cambridge for a showdown against Harvard University. Both teams now have 10-1 records in the NECVL Division One standings. This match will decide where the two teams will be seeded for the championships at Harvard Sunday.

Sox win, 5-4 on Fisk homer

BOSTON (AP) - Carlton Fisk drilled Aurelio Lopez's first pitch in the 11th inning into the left-field screen Thursday, lifting the Boston Red Sox to a 5-4 victory over the Detroit Tigers.

Lopez, 0-1, had allowed only two hits after taking over with the score tied 4-4 in the seventh until Fisk unloaded his first homer of the season. Veteran reliever Dick Drago, 1-1, picked up the victory by checking the Tigers on one hit in 4 2/3 innings.

The victory extended Boston's winning streak to four games after two opening losses at Milwaukee. The Tigers suffered their sixth consecutive loss in returning home with a 1-6 record.

After blowing a 3-0 lead, Detroit tied the score against Drago in the seventh. Steve Kemp singled and, after Hebner walked, Kemp scored on Champ Summers' fourth hit, a single to the right.

Student wants FAST settlement

By MIKE ESTRADA

Amherst College Senior Michael Levin has shown just what can happen "over a bowl of Wheaties."

The 21-year old English/Ancient Greek major from Roslin, N.Y. was contemplating the proposed Major League Baseball Players strike over Breakfast on March 31 with friends when they decided something should be done.

Along with David Katzner, a student at Ithaca College, Levin established a nationwide organization called Fans Against Strike Talk (FAST). The group hopes to collect the signatures of 60,000 fans, "the size of a very large ballpark," for presentation to Player Representative Marvin Miller before the May 26 owners' deadline for meeting the demands of the Major League Players Association.

"The papers didn't have the slightest mention of the fans or the fact that they even existed," Levin said. "We hope to provide a united voice to say that the fans will be the most hurt if the players go on strike."

Levin and four other FAST members went to Fenway Park on opening day this week to collect signatures from those fans who support the statement that "players and owners settle their differences away from the ballparks and end the strike fast."

According to Levin, a life-long Met fan who says the Red Sox chances in 1980 "rest with (Carlton) Fisk's knees," he and the other FAST members collected about 2000 signatures.

"For the most part people were willing to sign. I was struck by the fact that men were more willing to sign than women. I think men have more passion for the game."

"Occasionally you got a pushy twelve-year-old, but usually you just yelled 'petition against the strike' and seventeen people would gather around."

It was one of those signee, Corinne Rice, wife of Boston slugger Jim, that has produced a lot of publicity for FAST. The Boston Globe reported yesterday that Mrs. Rice was out of town, not at the ballgame. According to Levin, the real first name of the slugger's wife is spelled with one 'R'. The signature on his petition had two.

"The woman was articulate, one who was clearly used to the spotlight," Levin said. He also said the woman asked if he knew who her husband was. "Besides," Levin said, "what would she be doing out of town on opening day."

The Fenway Park exposure elicited nationwide response. Wire services and the Globe have played up the story.

"We've had about a dozen calls from people who want to be regional coordinators. There is a large number of people who feel the way we do."

Levin said any UMass student who is interested in FAST can contact him at his Amherst College Box number.

Winner Bill Rodgers after the race.

Rodgers does it again

By DAVE O'HARA
AP Sports Writer

BOSTON – Wiry Bill Rodgers, admittedly "freaked out and drying in the end," put away chief rivals at the halfway mark and turned the 84th Boston Marathon into his own private race yesterday in easily winning the classic for the fourth time.

"I ran real hard to make my breakaway, then I hit the walls," Rodgers said after becoming only the third four-time winner of the 26-mile, 385-yard run from Hopkinton to Boston's Back Bay.

"It was a struggle just to get home," the 32-year-old Rodgers said. "My legs are real beat. The crowd drove me. I'd rather be in the Olympics than anything, but I don't even know if I would have made the team."

Rodgers dominated his hometown course for the third consecutive year, hitting the finish line in two hours, 12 minutes and 11 seconds.

Running the last 10 miles with only a state police motorcycle escort at his heels, Rodgers was in total command.

Italy's Marco Marchei hung tough in his first Boston visit and finished second, more than 500 yards back, in 2:13:20.

Ron Tabb of Houston, Texas, another victim of Rodgers's furious, mid-race sprint, was third in 2:14:48, followed by Michael Koussis of Greece in 2:16:03 and Paul Friedman of New Brunswick, N.J., in 2:16:46.

Rodgers, who first won the Boston Marathon while a schoolteacher in 1975, missed in a bid to break his record of 2:09:27, set in cold, rainy weather last year. Because of a hot sun yesterday, along with a temperature of about 70 degrees, he elected to stay back for the first half of the race.

However, alternately sipping water and dousing himself, he wore down everyone, finally forcing out his final threat, Kirk Pfeffer of Boulder, Colo., at the 15-mile mark. From that point on, Rodgers didn't even bother to look over his shoulder, although he said later he suffered leg cramps the last six miles.

Rodgers survived a scare less than one mile from the finish when two police horses nearly ran him down. They were spooked by the crowd and wailing sirens.

The first mount brought Rodgers to a nearly complete stop. Then, when the other bolted in Rodgers' direction, the runner veered, losing any chance at the course record he set last year.

Rodgers, now a sportswear tycoon, has been training in the heat of Florida and Arizona, preparing for the Olympic marathon this summer in Moscow.

Although bitter at the U.S. decision to boycott the games, he cooled his temper in the Boston heat. With a big smile, he called it "the toughest race I've ever run here."

Benji Durden of Stone Mountain, Ga., was sixth in 2:17:46, followed by Jamie White of Mountain View, Calif., in 2:17:58, Stephen Floto Boulder, Colo., 2:18:19.

Collins rescues portion of UMass budget

By MARC FAGELSON
Collegian Staff

The $5.9 billion Massachusetts state budget moved through the House of Representatives last week and changes to the UMass portion of the budget were minimal.

With the exception of one amendment made by Rep. James Collins, D-Amherst, to shift $1.5 of the utility's allotment to the permanent personnel account of the UMass-Amherst portion, the budget was identical to that recommended earlier this month by the House Ways and Means Committee, Ken Moore, a member of the Student Center for Educational Research and Advocacy, said yesterday.

"We didn't get any more money," Moore said. "We shifted what we got around so that we can use it better."

The reduced allotment for utilities "won't be much of a problem for the campus," Moore said. "We can use it (the 1.5 million) better in the permanent personal account, where we needed it desparatly," he added.

The Ways and Means Committee's recommendations could have cut as many as 160 faculty and janitorial jobs during the next year through layoffs and attrition, Collins said last week; but the addition of 1.5 million to that account can save many of those positions.

"My guess is that 66 or so positions could be saved by the amendment," Moore said.

"We're pleased with how our lobbying went," Moore said. "50 UMass students participated over three days and we established ourselves as a legitimate lobbying force in the state. The impressions I got from legislators were positive," he said.

When the budget goes to the Senate to be revised further, students will lobby for more student aid and library funding, Moore said.

But, at least "this is a budget we can live with," he said.

Earlier in the week, the House voted to reorganize the state's higher education system, despite efforts by Collins to strike the reorganizations plan with an amendment.

The plan will phase-out the Boards of Trustees of State colleges and regional community colleges, and place the 25 schools affected under the power of a 15-member Board of Regents.

The states universities, UMass included, would not be affected immediately by the reorganization plan, Moore said.

Census prowls campus

University students living in residence halls, fraternities and sororities who have not returned their federal census forms are urged to do so as soon as possible, says Jerry Grady, community relations coordinator.

Those failing to return the forms will be contacted by census officials, who will be on campus this week.

Forms are returnable through campus mail.

Additional forms can be picked up in room 235 of the Whitmore Administration Building.

The importance of an accurate census cannot be overestimated, Grady said, adding the legislative apportionment, federal money to states and state funds going to local municipalities are affected by the census.

Israel marks independence

By MICHAEL PRECKER
Associated Press

TEL AVIV, Israel – A crowd of nationalist Israelis estimated by police at more than 30,000 marched through the occupied West Bank to Jerusalem on yesterday marking the 32nd anniversary of the founding of modern-day Israel.

The marchers, organized by the right-wing Gush Emunim group which spearheads Israel's settlement drive in occupied Arab territory, walked seven miles through the picturesque hills of Samaria to Jerusalem.

Elsewhere in the West Bank, three Israeli soldiers and two Arab villagers were injured in an unusual clash that the army said began when the villagers mistook the soldiers for Bedouin thieves.

Court adjudicates abortion

WASHINGTON (AP) – The Supreme Court yesterday explored whether Congress has the right to encourage even abnormal childbirths by denying welfare funds for most abortions.

The debate embraced medicine and religion along with the law as the justices heard arguments in a major test of the right of Congress to determine how welfare money can be spent.

The case involves the federal law prohibiting welfare payments, for all abortions except those necessary to save the mother's life or to terminate pregnancies resulting from rape or incest.

Representing the government, Solicitor General Wade McCree asserted that the law "is rationally related to a legitimate government interest in preserving potential human life and encouraging childbirth."

Justice John Paul Stevens asked McCree whether the government would have the same interest in promoting abnormal childbirths as normal one.

Church sends message to Iran

INDIANANPOLIS (AP) – Delegates to the United Methodists' governing conference voted yesterday to send a message of sympathy to Iran's leaders, pleading that the U.S. hostages be set free while voicing distress at past foreign imperialism in that Muslim country.

The church also authorized a $25 million venture into the television business.

It was the first time a national Christian body appealed directly on a religious basis to Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini.

Delegates representing the church's 9.6 million members rejected inclusion of a proposed explicit apology for "any complicity" of the United States in "crimes and injustices." But the approved message says:

"We ... hear the agonies of your people; we hear their cries for freedom from foreign domination, from cultural imperialism, from economic exploitation. We long for that time when our peoples may dwell together in peace.

"In the words of Moses, the liberator, let us say to each other, 'Let my people go!' And let us begin to walk together down the long, hard road toward reconciliation."

Jury weighs Lance decision

ATLANTA (AP) – A federal court jury of six men and six women – none a college graduate and none experienced in finance – began yesterday to de-liberate complicated bank fraud charges against Bert Lance and three associates.

The jurors retired with stacks of bank records, copies of the indictment and their notes from the testimony of 173 witnesses who appeared during the 14-week trial.

It took nearly 3¼ hours – punctuated by two coffee breaks – for U.S. District Judge Charles A. Moye Jr. to instruct the jury on the law and to detail the contentions of both sides on each of 19 counts, 12 of which charge Lance with a crime.

Moye told the jury to disregard an earlier attempt by Lance's attorney to sway the verdict by arguing that a conviction would ruin the former U.S. budget director's reputation.

"I charge you most specifically to disregard any appeal by any counsel to your sympathy," Moye said. "You are responsible for the truthfulness of your verdict. You are not responsible for its consequences."

The jurors ranged in age from 23 to 72. They include an auto assembly plant worker who said he admired Lance because he was in a "high position," and a country music guitarist who said he assumed "something must be wrong" when Lance resigned his federal post in 1977.

Mom visits hostage son

By The Associated Press

In the first visit by a relative of any of the American hostages in Iran, a Wisconsin mother said she hugged and kissed her son yesterday during a "small miracle" that brought a reunion inside the U.S. Embassy in Tehran.

Barbara Timm of Oak Creek, Wis., told reporters in Tehran after a five-hour stay in the embassy she held her son's hand the entire 45 minutes they were together, she found him in excellent health and he told her he was "a stronger person" as a result of his 170 days in captivity.

She said her son, Marine Sgt. Kevin Hermening, told her he and several other hostages spend much of their time reading and playing cards. Hermening, 20, is the the youngest of the 50 hostages.

The visit came as Iran experienced its fourth day of campus disturbances over the ruling Revolutionary Council's order last week closing political party headquarters on universities and purging anti-Islamic elements. Iran closed it. Iran closed the universities until Tuesday in a move to halt the violence, which Tehran Radio said left 150 persons injured yesterday at the University of Tehran.

The radio said the council met last night to consider the violence. Witnesses said one person was killed and many were injured during the weekend.

In an address to his student followers, broadcast by Tehran Radio, Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini said, "We expect our university youth not to help those who plan to impose economic sanctions against us, or claim to impose an economic boycott on us."

"We are not afraid of economic sanctions, we are not afraid of military intervention," Khomeini said. "What frightens us is cultural dependence. We are afraid of a colonial university."

Iranian President Abolhassan Bani-Sadr said, "Any assembly or the instigation of violence inside or outside the universities will be considered counter-revolutionary acts," the official Iranian news agency Pars reported.

"Any gathering or attack on political centers outside the universities will be regarded as a plot against the revolutionary government," Pars quoted the Iranian president as saying in a statement.

Mrs. Timm and her husband, Kenneth, arrived Saturday after President Carter's announcement last Thursday that no Americans except journalists would be permitted to travel to Iran. The State Department made no effort to prevent the Timms from making the trip, and spokesman Hodding Carter said yesterday the Timms would not be prosecution because their trip came before the travel ban went into effect.

Mrs.Timm's husband, stepfather of her son, was not allowed by militants holding the embassy to join in the meeting, she said. Militants and a Iranian television crew accompanied her, she told the Tehran news conference.

"I achieved a small miracle ... they said it couldn't be done," Mrs. Timm said of her visit. "There was a lot of hugging, a lot of touching. There were no tears," she told reporters.

She said her son talked about his favorite subjects: baseball, the Oak Creek basketball team, the car he wants to buy, his girl friend and his family. She said he knew about some sports activities that had occurred since militants seized the embassy Nov. 4.

She said she gave a silver good luck charm to her son, who told her he had gained two pounds while in captivity.

Mrs. Timm said they did not talk about politics, a subject forbidden by the militants. She said she emerged from her visit with a better understanding of the Iranians and the militants she met inside the embassy. She made clear that she did not approve of hostage-taking.

Mrs. Barbara Timm, mother of American hostage Kevin Hermening, returns to her Tehran hotel yesterday after seeing her son in captivity at the U.S. Embassy. Husband Kenneth protects her with a comforting hand as they face a barrage of TV lights and newsman. (AP Laserphoto)

Kennedy: 'No more Carter'

Associated Press

PHILADELPHIA – Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, striving for a badly needed win in the Pennsylvania presidential primary, implored the state's Democrats yesterday to vote "no more Jimmy Carter."

Addressing a big noontime rally at a crowded downtown Philadelphia intersection, Kennedy said he hopes the coming recession is so mild "that only one person is going to lose his job. And that's going to be Jimmy Carter."

With several thousand people standing in the street and hundreds more looking down from their office windows, Kennedy denounced Carter's foreign and economic policies.

"I say it's time to say to every citizen of Philadelphia, to every citizen of Pennsylvania – no more American hostages, no more high interest rates, no more high inflation and no more Jimmy Carter."

Kennedy, making a final, daylong pitch for voter support in Tuesday's primary, was flying on to Pittsburgh for the last appearance of his two-week campaign in Pennsylvania.

Kennedy's aides say the Massachusetts senator must win in Pennsylvania to keep alive his chances of taking the party's presidential nomination away from Carter. Kennedy himself acknowledges that a win would add "impetus" to his effort in other states, but he insists he will stay in the race regardless of the outcome today.

Kennedy and most of his aides refused to predict the primary results. Only one aide, who insisted on speaking anonymously, forecast a Kennedy victory.

There are 185 Democratic National Convention delegates at stake in the primary, the third largest of any state delegation that will gather at the New York City convention site in August.

There was no immediate estimate from city officials on the size of the rally crowd in Philadelphia. Kennedy's aides had hoped to produce a crowd bigger than the 15,000 that greeted him in Pittsburgh several weeks ago.

Europeans may impose sanctions

By HENRY GOTTLIEB
Associate Press

LUXENBOURG – Common Market foreign ministers, debating what steps Western Europe should take in the U.S.-Iran crisis, are ready to recommend stopping imports of Iranian oil, drastically reducing diplomatic contacts and banning arms sales to Iran, diplomatic sources said yesterday.

If that does not pressure Iran into releasing the 50 U.S. Embassy hostages, the nine-nation Common Market would be prepared to end all trade with the Iranians, the sources said.

The foreign ministers, who opened their meeting here Monday, were expected to announce the anti-Iran steps today.

Earlier yesterday, Australia became the second Western country to follow President Carter's lead by ordering economic retaliatory steps against Iran.

The Australian Cabinet decided to discourage non-food exports to Iran by denying Australian firms export incentives, subsidies and tax concessions for such trade, and to limit insurance coverage for Iran-bound goods.

Portugal was the first to join the U.S.-led sanctions, imposing a total ban on Portuguese-Iranian trade last week.

The two-stage Western European plan calls for reduction of embassy staffs in Tehran and similar cutbacks at Iranian missions to Common Market countries, prohibition of arms sales to Iran and a cutoff of all purchases of Iranian oil, the sources said.

If these actions do not help win the hostages' release, all trade relations between the nine nations and Iran would be broken.

Some sources said the second, tougher stage would be implemented by May 15 if the hostages were not released, but this could not be confirmed.

U.S. officials had indicated Carter might want to keep some of the multi-national moves in reserve until next month.

The European plan, proposed by Britain last week, has received widespread support, even from France, which earlier was viewed as unwilling to take such strong measures.

A high-ranking French diplomat said, "We accept the proposal."

A German source said that to do less than the British proposal would damn Europe in the eyes of American public opinion "and that's too high a price to pay."

Are court photos OK?

By RICHARD CARELLI
Associated Press

WASHINGTON – The Supreme Court said yesterday it will decide whether television and still-photography coverage of trials is constitutional.

The justices said they will review Florida court rulings that such news coverage does not automatically ruin a fair trial.

The court's eventual decision is not likely before 1981.

It was 15 years ago when the Supreme Court overturned the swindling conviction of Texas financier Billy Sol Estes, ruling that television's techniques as they then existed inherently interfered with a fair trial.

But in writing for the court in that 1965 decision, the late Justice Tom Clark said, "When the advances in these arts permit reporting ... by television without their present hazard to a fair trial we will have another case."

Since then, many states have allowed television and stillcamera coverage of court proceedings even though the American Bar Association has refused to back down from its longtime opposition.

The ABA's ethical standards imposing an absolute ban on electronic media and photographic coverage of courts still serve as a model for half the states and the federal judiciary.

Of those states permitting some form of camera coverage, only Florida and New Hampshire have adopted permanent policies not requiring consent from persons directly involved.

Cavanaugh battles PCP as 'horrible drug'

By BRUCE WARD
Collegian Staff

Associate Director of Public Safety Philip Cavanough, who is also on the New England Narcotics Enforcement Board of Directors is attempting to have the drug phencyclidin (PCP) moved up to a Class B controlled substance because he's "convinced it's a horrible drug...a drug beyond your comprehension."

'It closely resembles a death-like state.'

One of the biggest problems with PCP, (or Angel Dust), Cavanaugh said, is that it is sold under so many different names. In 99 times out of 100 PCP is the substance being sold under the name THC or synthetic mescaline,

Cavanaugh added. "It's showing up all over the place," he said, mainly because it is relatively easy to make and the profit margin is so large; $200 worth of over the counter drugs will make $200,000 worth of PCP.

Stressing the negative effects of the drug, Cavanaugh said it's "damned important that those kids know that a lot of the stuff" they think is merely concentrated marijuana (THC) is really an extremely dangerous chemical.

"It's the one drug that closely resembles a death-like state. It is associated with violent reactions by normally non-violent people and it has probably played a significant role in a number of drownings and suicides," Cavanaugh said.

Adding that it is "goddam shame" there isn't more money available for drug education in the lower grades he said that a lot of this "shit" is getting into the junior high schools and doing "serious damage to the kids there."

Local attempts to educate UMass Residence Assistants as to the dangers involved may reduce the amounts of damage done by PCP, Cavanaugh said.

Concrete canoe launched

By CAROLE SAKOWSKI
Collegian Staff

A concrete canoe, weighing almost 180 pounds – about 80 pounds more than a standard sized canoe – was launched into the campus pond on Fiday afternoon by a team of five UMass civil engineering students.

The team, comprising Sam Brindis, Carolyn Gorczyca, Pat Thompson, Loren Wood and Paul Queeny will enter the canoe in a five mile white water race in Maine April 26. Competing against 15 to 20 other college and university concrete canoe teams, this will be the sixth year that a UMass team will be entered.

The competition is sponsored by the University of Maine, and is judged for both race and design. Since its first year of entry in 1975, UMass has captured the design award every year.

Sam Brindis, speaking for the team, said that this year's canoe took the team about two months to construct. It is 16.5 feet long and 36 inches wide. The project is estimated to have cost about $500.

After Friday's successful launching, Brindis predicted that the UMass team will win this year's race.

Bostonians and visitors alike crammed the streets of the Hub yesterday to see the 84th running of the Boston marathon. These two gents watched Bill Rodgers win again from a nearby stop light. (Staff photo by J. Ferrarone)

Summer in Amherst

Area job prospects bleak

By PHILLIP GOLDEN
Special to the Collegian

There may not be enough jobs to go around for students seeking summer employment in the Amherst area, according to Ellie Conrey of Student Employment in Whitmore.

For students remaining in the Amherst area this summer, the search for employment will be a bleak one, she said. "The summer job market in the Amherst area bottles up through the summer months," and finding a job may entail a lot of "scratching and hunting," Conrey said.

There are two catagories of summer employment in the Amherst area; those positions directly related to the University, and otside positions with private firms. Work-study and non work-study positions are available within the University, while malls, independant stores and neighboring farms hold the majority of positions available outside the University.

Thorugh the summer months, work-study positions constitute many of work opprtunities open to students in this area. These jobs include work in groundskeeping, with the Food Services, and in the campus offices which remain active June through September. Work-study positions may also be obtained off-campus if the job is approved by the Student Employment Office in Whitmore. These summer positions have restrictions concerning the amount of salary money which may be spent by the employee, and the percentages of work-study students must save for use in the school year. This percentage is often high, Conrey said.

However, obtaining a non work-study position through the University is difficult, Conrey said.

Food Services offers few temporary positions throughout the summer and these postitions depend on the number of conventions the University hosts throught he summer, she said. They are tentative and last minute at best, and often give little notice before the job is to be assumed, Conrey said.

Off campus, non work-study positions also present little opportunity to the student seeking employment. Those depending on summer employment in this area should have a job before the school year ends, Conrey said. Because area businesses experience a drop in trade through the summer months due to the drop in population, area employment experiences the same lapse.

Perhaps the best opportunity in the Amherst area for students willing to work is to apply at one of the neighboring tobacco farms in the Amherst, Hadley, and Sunderland area. These farms offer a wealth of employment possibilities to area students in the summer months. However, the work is hard and in many cases the pay is minimal.

The Student Employment Office in Whimore offers a peer counselling program which may aid the student wishing to find employment in the area this summer. The staff is informative and helpful, with a wide range of knowledge and experience concerning the summer employment outlook, Conrey said.

Newsletters keep grads informed

By CARL HOFFMAN
Special to the Collegian

Students may graduate and leave UMass – but UMass doesn't leave them. By publishing newsletters, various departments keep alumni in touch with departmental activities.

These letters serve two functions. The first is an attempt to elicit funds from alumni, while the second is to solicit job opportunities for graduating students from alumni who are in a position to hire.

Jeff Wilkes, who is in charge of the School of Education's newsletter, said the purpose is to "facilitate a working relationship between the alumni and school."

Wilkes said the school's publication had a positive response – so positive that Wilkes has upgraded it into a magazine format. He stressed the importance of gaining jobs and improving "public relations" between graduate students and alumni over the importance of receiving money from them.

In a survey of various departments, the Collegian found that alumni newsletters are primarily used by liberal arts departments, although the School of Business Administration has a mailing list of about 6,000 names and publishes a newsletter four times a year.

Charles Moran, head of the English department, said his program had run a survey which showed alumni support the publication. The main emphasis of this 10 to 12 page publication is job placement.

One of the newest publications is published by the Journalistic Studies department. Although only two issues have been mailed, Howard Zill, acting department head, said the letter has been well received.

Among other departments sending out newsletters are History, Classics, and Hotel, Restaurant and Travel Administration.

Art suspect arrested

University police arrested a 32-year-old suspect Friday in connection with the theft last month of art work valued at $1,500.

Paul Withers, former UMass director of veterans assistance and counseling services, and former UMass student, was arrested at The Foundary, the art studio from which the works were originally stolen, police said.

After obtaining a search warrant from Hampshire District Court in Northampton, police searched Withers' automobile, parked at a University parking lot, but found none of the missing art works.

Police suspect the theft was an "inside job" because there were no signs of forcible entry at The Foundary – the site where the statues were stolen in early March.

The statues have not been recovered.

Women and Business Conference at UMass

Women tailor jobs to needs

By MARCIA MURPHY
Collegian Staff

"Women won't change the world of work, but can alter it to suit their needs," said Joan Pinck, keynote speaker at the UMass Women and Business conference held this weekend.

She addressed 200 people Saturday at the Newman Center during the first activity of the conference.

Pinck is assistant director for Research Administration at Beth Israel Hospital and former Vice Chancellor of the UMass Board of Higher Education.

Pinck, 50, said women today have many advantages she didn't have when she entered the working world. "It used to be your career was a hobby. For a long time I was the only woman in our neighborhood who worked. If one of my children fell out of a tree, it was because I was working," said Pinck.

She said it is important for women today to realize how hard it's been for "women before us who have been fighting." She said, "From my perspective, the pace of change has really accelerated in the past three to five years. The critical mass (the number of working women) is approaching the appropriate size." The feeling is no longer that you are alone, she said.

Finck discussed discrimination and victimization of women in business. She said, "It has generally been believed that women and minorities have to do twice as good to get half as far. Women probably have to do better than men," to get ahead, she said.

She added, although stereotypical discrimination is present in the working woman's world, "you can outwit it, at least part of the time. Take advantage of the support other women will give you, and don't make it just a taking relationship."

Pinck also stressed the values of women may sooner or later change the world of work. But advised, "Keep it out of the work day."

Women deprived of pensions

By JANET GREGORIAN
Special to the Collegian

Only one of six women over 65 receive pensions, according to a report entitled, "Older Women and Pensions: Catch 22," published by the Older Women's League Educational Fund. The poverty rate for older women, who make up two thirds of America's retired population, is 60 percent higher than that of retired men.

Ellisa Hovagimian of the Northampton District Attorney's office said homemakers have no record of wages at this point and "not much can be done when dealing with wages."

"In order for this to change, major legislation is needed," said Hovagimian. Revenue-generating activities are rewarded by pension plans and homemakers tasks do not yet fit this category.

Women who work outside of the home are usually not long-term, well-paid steady workers, thus they are not eligible for most pension plans. According to the report, women often don't work until after their children have grown or their husbands have died.

Barbara Griffith, executive director of the Council On Aging, located in Amherst's Bangs Community Center, said this is a problem for older women who do not have families for support. Griffith said it is recognized as an "ongoing problem" and although no action has been taken by the council yet, it soon will.

There is no state legislation pending to improve the pension situation of older women, Hovagimian said.

"It would be on this level if there is to be any change at all," she said.

Reviewer winces as Stompers hit Wall

By JIM MORAN
Collegian Staff

The Stompers, a "favorite" of Boston rock crowds, extended their cheering squad to the "Happy Valley" Friday night, as they appeared here at the Blue Wall.

This was their second performance this year at UMass.

This Boston-based group has had considerable airplay on Boston FM outlets WBCN and WCOZ, a 'hit' with their song "American Fun," and have just released their eighth single, "You're The One."

Although the response of the crowd at the Wall Friday night was favorable, it still goes to show that art and popularity do not go hand in hand—necessarily.

Though competent musicians, the Stompers rely too much upon simplistic adolescent themes—as one song "Huggin' and Kissing'" proves. The problem with this song, as indicative of their "style," is their intentional effort to appeal to the masses, rather than relying upon their own intelligence, if present. "Making out with my Girlfriend" just doesn't cut the critical cake, as the Cars have demonstrated more recently, along with The Knack.

"Shutdown," a highly-charged song was the best of the lot, and the group does try hard, but the basic building guitar rhythms by leader Sal Baglio tend to be tediously-overdone. Also noteworthy in a negative sense was the hollow-sounding tempo of drummer Mark "Cooch" Cuccinello.

The band tends to rely upon a trite, romantic notion that the working class person is some sort of hero, uttering drones about "working in the factory" as if they were a collective Bruce Springsteen. When are they, like so many others in the business, going to realize that working class people are basically stupid, not worth the flattery they receive in some songs, and that "happy, hardworking, zombies" don't make good copy? Rock and roll is about decadence, depravity, suffering and border-line lunacy. C'mon guys.

The Stompers are: Baglio and "Cooch," Steve Gilligan, bass and Dave Freidman, keyboards.

Eminent destruction

Some will be dropped the old-fashioned way, just like the conventional ones. Some will be delivered to within yards of their targets by high-tech missiles with impressive guidance systems, some of which will be fired from submarines, others shot from holes in the ground.

If the unfortunate day comes, they will get there.

"There" could be a mile over the city you live in, or upwind of the farm your milk comes from. It could be where millions of people live and work, where essential goods are made or services performed. It could be anywhere at all.

Suddenly an absurdly large flashbulb goes off. Many miles away, people see it. Its light and heat are intense enough to torch things nine miles away.

The temperature rises into the millions of degrees in the center of the blast. A shock wave—"literally a wall of compressed air" ripples through the atmosphere surrounding the explosion. Only eleven seconds after the warhead detonates, the shock front has traveled more than three miles, and the winds in its wake chase it at one hundred and eight miles an hour. Most buildings at this distance are flattened.

People as far as ten miles away, on a clear day, will be burned as they stand outside. Danger from glass shrapnel from broken windows extends to eight miles out. Half of the people within a four and three-tenths mile radius will be killed. An equal number outside this circle will die almost immediately. Delayed effects, including skin burns and radiation sickness, will kill many more.

Overturned cars with leaky fuel tanks, ruptured storage tanks of home heating oil, broken pipelines, widely scattered rubbish, and possibly lakes of flammable liquids from an industry's storage tank farm feed the countless small fires which assemble, coalescing into a massive firestorm, driven by the winds rushing back into the blast area. If the natural winds are brisk, it could mean a sustained, intensely hot fire, sure to mean death to those who are either in it or beneath it in shelters.

Two minutes past detonation, what's left of the bomb is in a cloud which extends fourteen miles up. The winds will distribute the material over hundreds of miles. Along with the radioactive debris, the mushroom cloud has carried into the upper atmosphere oxides of nitrogen created by the blast. In an all-out nuclear war, these compounds could destroy half of the ozone over the Northern hemisphere, and thirty per cent of that over the Southern. This would mean that much higher levels of ultraviolet light would penetrate the protective ozone layer, increasing the risk of skin cancers and affecting, on a world-wide basis, the growth and development of plants. The ozone, once depleted, would remain so for years.

In the event of a total nuclear war, we must expect that much—perhaps forty percent—of each combatant's population will be killed very quickly. Many of those remaining would be the walking dead: badly burned or irradiated, or exposed to diseases rampant in a bombed-out land. With their resistance lowered by even mild cases of radiation sickness, many would not survive the epidemics which would follow such a holocaust. Medical personnel who survived the attack would be hard pressed to deal with mass casualties, and each beneficient government would start wide distribution of morphine and other opiates from its large stockpiles. Burial would be in mass graves dug by heavy equipment and covered over with quicklime, cement, then earth.

How one would pick the winner is unclear.

'HERE COMES UNCLE, RIGHT ON TIME FOR HIS ANNUAL HANDOUT. I DON'T SUPPOSE THERE'S ANY POINT IN ASKING HIM NOT TO WASTE IT!'

Guilt debris and spring cleaning

With the advent of spring—the bright, exempting afternoons and tepid evenings—to you come a myriad of natural urges, the slightest being the desire to work. But you have promised yourself that work is mostly what you're here to do, so when your taste for it is lost to idle thought and roving eyes, you become in peril of dangerous selfcriticism and wrathful wounds to the ego by implements of guilt.

Guilt, the most pernicious of self-regulatory psychic forces, should always be avoided; it is motivation for as many foul acts as fair, impedes life's joyous, productive spontaneity, and takes the fun out of burning your car for the insurance money.

Luckily, God has endowed us with the facility to overcome guilt through the power of intellect. Thus, it wasn't such a bad thing to have done, torching that gas-guzzling shit-box and collecting twice its market value from dorks working for a multi-national insurance company that's been ripping you off in over-inflated monthly premiums for the last four years, and which owns several pharmaceutical products manufacturing plants in Southeast Asia where its hazardous drugs are hawked to misinformed indigenous consumers—and so weiter.

As I'm stretched out in the noon sun's prideful glare, considering the graceful touch of a woman's hands resting upon her stomach as she sleeps a few yards away, I combat with solid logic the gnawing disappointment of missing yet another class: If I go to all my classes and do all my studying, I'll be putting in upwards of eight to ten hours on what amounts to work, and if I wanted to work I'd get a job.

Sometimes this effort fails, however, and methods other than syllogistics need be applied to assuage the baneful guilt of indolence. Drugs that deaden or scramble the conscience, starving guilt forthwith. But drugs only put guilt off until restored brain function nourishes culpability—or treatment must be continued indefinitely, causing stammering, nose bleed, weight loss and financial ruin.

Where drugs and logic fail, guilt can still be beaten and life fulfilled; it can be denied. As for any other social disease which generates guilt, the diagnosis of slothfulness requires a second opinion. To effectively refuse contrition, acquire an estimation of your laziness from one of your friends that you can always find in the Hatch from ten o'clock till noon, sitting outside the Student Union from noon till four o'clock, and in the Blue Wall till closing. Imagine him industrious, his view knowledgeable and salient.

And if that doesn't work, you can always pick up your books and go to the damned library. There's nothing like hard work to relieve guilt, though there's no greater embarassment than being snared by a stringent work ethic at such a spirited age. What a waste.

Christian Semitism

To the Editor:

I feel compelled to make a few comments regarding Yitzhak Santis' editorial "Anti-Semitism in real life." [Collegian 4/16] I am in full agreement with Mr. Santis' condemnation of anti-Semitism, as I have also observed it in all its full repulsiveness on this campus. However, in his analysis of the root causes of anti-Semitism in this culture he labels Christianity, and the writings of the New Testament, as fundamentally anti-Semetic and thus a basic cause of anti-Semitism. Here I must differ with Mr. Santis.

Christianity was originally a sect of Judiasm, and Jesus [Hebrew spelling, Yeshua] and his first followers were Jews. The confusion whereby it is thought that the Jews are labeled in the New Testament as the persecutors of Jesus comes from the use of the word "Jews" in some of the New Testamnnt gospels to denote the Jewish religious hierarchy, which regarded Jesus as a subversive influence.

Indeed, with the exception of maybe one or two authors, the entire New Testamnnt [so called because it is of later date than the Hebrew scriptures, or Old Testament] was written by Jews. Throughout it the Hebrew scriptures are cited as a final authority, and as the root of which the New Testament is an extension.

St. Paul [Saul] warns against anti-Semitism in his letter to the Italian Christians at Rome, and does not attack Judiasm per se, but rather those Jews of the time who relied on their own efforts to gain favor with God. [See Romans, Chapter 11].

I am deeply sorrowed that many of the attacks upon Jews have come from those claiming to be Christians but appear to have no knowledge of Christianity's beginnings or writings. And it is my hope that such cultural hatred should cease.

Personality view

To the Editor:

I am writing this letter in response to the article by Yitzhak Santis (Wednesday, 4/16). In the fourth paragraph, he refers to his life in the dorm. As a neighbor of his for three semesters, I feel I should present some "facts and opinions."

First of all, he states that the attitudes of the corridor changed towards him once he revealed his Jewish heritage. As I recall, for the first two semesters, Jeff (as he was known then) had nothing but disdain for anything that had to do with Judaism. It was not until our third semester that Jeff (now Yitzhak) had become thoroughly involved with his religion.

Secondly, if the attitude of the corridor did change, it certainly had no bearing on his Judaism. There were other Jewish students who were as much a part of the corridor as anyone else. We weren't concerned with other's personal beliefs. Speaking for myself, any change in attitude was more likely due to personality conflicts. If Yitzhak feels this is an example of anti-Semitism, then by his way of thinking, any conflict between persons of different faith, heritage, etc. should be regarded as acts of anti-Semitism, racism, etc. This is ridiculous.

I don't know what Yitzhak's experiences were like after he left our corridor as far as dorm life is concerned, and I won't pretend that there weren't ever any anti-Semitic acts; I mainly wanted to reassure him that if he felt left out of the mainstream of the corridor's social life, believe me, it had nothing to do with his being Jewish.

Waste not ye facility

To the Editor:

The purpose of this letter is to encourage students to utilize the new hours of the Tower section of the University Library. In addition, I would personally like to thank Richard Talbot, University Library Director, for his concern for the ever-present need of study space.

The point should also be emphasize that both Goodell Library and the Tower Library will have the same hours for the remainder of the semester. The capacity of the University Library is now 1400, and more space can be made available if needed. I simply would like to appeal to everyone to make use of this beautiful and expensive facility and show the library system that the decision to extend the hours was the right one. Please keep in mind, however, that if the library is not used, the old hours will go into effect once again, permanently.

German troupe shows six Brecht dramas

By CAROLYN MOONEY
Collegian STAFF

Bertolt Brecht's "Fear and Misery of the Third Reich," performed Thursday night by the Wallgraben Theater Company of Freiburg, Germany, is a powerful and intriguing dramatization of early Nazism in everyday German life.

The company presented—in German—six of the original 24 scenes from the play known as "Furcht und Elend des Dritten Reiches." Each scene focuses on a different psychological manifestation of Nazism: a couple who has criticized the government fears that their son, a member of the Hitler youth organization, left the house in order to report them. When he comes home with a bog of candy, they are still not sure where he went. A Jewish woman leaves her Aryan husband one spring day because he doesn't want to jeopardize his career as a big-city doctor. He insists she will be gone only a few weeks, but still hands him her fur coat as she leaves. A storm-trooper tries to trick a German worker into speaking critically of Hitler's regime, and when he does, slaps the worker on the back leaving a chalk mark which identifies him as an "enemy of the people."

Because Brecht's often-preachy dramas deal with complex issues (and "Fear and Terror" is no exception), a good knowledge of German—which most of the Bowker Auditorium audience seemed to possess—is essential to fully appreciating and comprehending his themes. With so little movement onstage and a set that consisted only of a few basic props against a black background, the weight of the play shifted to the effectiveness of the actors' in-

Neighborhoods play songs with everyday, simple themes which apply to American youths. They are not a violent punk rock band which plays loud, offensive music. Minehan believes they have a unique American appeal and believes, "The kids in America haven't grown up in England and had the throb of heart that those English kids go through so sometimes it's hard for them to identify" with such groups as The Jam and the early Clash, who are from England.

Their opening number "No Place Like Home," which along with "Prettiest Girl" appears on their single and only record to date, got the mood hopping as drummer Mike "Careful" Quaglia pounded out the opening drum lines with bassist John Hartcorn's driving bass notes right with him. Minehan summoned the crowd to get going with his fast moving eyes and vigor as he sang of an all too common American household: Ma and Dad are so frightening/Every day is a crisis/Dad comes home and he's nervous/The air's so thick you can't breathe/Don't let them get to you/There's not much you can do/I've been there/Boy I know what you're going through/Life's no fun, let's pretend.

The Jam song "Standards" was covered with the proper tone required for the song which is a rebellious chant against living in a regulated society with all sorts of rules and standards. Here, Minehan showed his customary zealousness by leaping around the stage as he snapped out the lyrics. He is quite a charismatic performer, a true rock & roll animal. With his dyed red hair and electrified eyes, he is reminiscent of the young David Bowie, and his energy, while on stage, seems limitless.

The Neighborhoods are committed to fun and pleasing their audiences by making them dance. Almost all of the band's songs use no-frills lyrics to create power packed dance songs. They look around the neighborhood and relate what they see. In "She's so Good" Minehan, who does all the writing for the group, progressively confesses, cries and finally screams out with the conviction of a young Mick Jagger circa Out of Our Heads, screaming "She's so good/I'm so bad."

Romance, its jubilations and frustrations is covered well by the Neighborhoods. This is a traditional rock subject dealt with by such greats as Eddie Cochran whose "Something Else" was transformed into a driving new wave song by the steady, booming beat of Hartcorn's bass guitar. Then during the second set, when nearly everyone in the audience was at least on their feet, The Who's "Can't Explain" and the Beatle's "Twist and Shout" were covered-and also the old Carl Perkins song popularized by the Beatles "Slow Down." Although the Neighborhoods' renditions of these songs were young and energetic, the vocal harmonies achieved by the Beatles and the Who weren't matched.

terpretations of Brecht's characters. Overall, the performances by the eight-member troupe were extremely strong. Jurgen Andreas as the Nazi stormtrooper, and Renate Redetzky as the woman who fears her son will turn her in were especially convincing in their roles.

In "Fear and Terror," Brecht's allusions to violence are never more blatant than an occasional swastika or a ringing telephone left unanswered or a radio broadcasting a speech made by the Fuhrer. He never dipicts actual torture or concentration camps, but instead shows how Germans of all social classes were affected and influenced by Hitler's agressive nationalism and anitsemitism when he took power in 1933. Everybody - including young children and citizens who knew what was going on but didn't want ot make waves and radical workers and upper-class elitists - was affected personally or psychologically by Hitler's doctrines as Brecht sees them. And this is what the play does so successfully.

German-born Brecht, exiled from West Germany during World War II for his anti-Nazi writings, lived and worked in New York and later in East Germany.

Spikers fall in final of NE championship

By MAUREEN SULLIVAN
Collegian Staff

CAMBRIDGE – Harvard University retained its New England Collegiate Volleyball championship title with a 15-13, 15-11, 16-14 sweep over UMass' men's team Sunday night.

Holding on with a constant outside attack and good passing, setting and blocking, UMass couldn't contain the Crimson's quick and floor-smashing one-sets, especially around the middle of the net.

UMass had advanced to the finals with a drawn-out match against Northeastern University. Lasting about two hours, the match was dominated by a lack of offense. UMass came away 15-5, 7-15, 8-15, 15-9, 15-9.

On Friday night, Harvard beat UMass to take first place in the NECVL Division One standings. The spikefest pitted the UMass outside attack against the Crimson's inside blitz. Harvard outspiked UMass to take the match 15-9, 15-12, 11-15, 15-9.

Throughout the weekend, UMass had to contend with injuries and without its hard-hitting freshman Quique Caballero, who learned of a relative's death ten minutes before leaving for Cambridge. While Pat Ryan sparked much of the UMass offense, the matches belonged to the seniors. Ed Midura, Jim Grosslein, Orlando Larracuente, Neil Gluck, Pete Nickerson and Mark Ferrante contributed their skills to the UMass effort for the last time of their college careers.

"The seniors played great," coach Al Morel said. "Ed did a great job being captain of the team. Even though we lost, we did better than last year (finishing fourth), and overall, we played very well."

"For a first-year coach, Al did a tremendous job," said Midura. "Considering all we went through this year, losing people and some matches, Al kept his cool. We would not have made it this far if it wasn't for him."

While the varsity has finished its season, the junior varsity is preparing for the Division Two Championships Saturday. NOPE gym is the probable site for the Championships.

At BC Relays

Wright leads trackmen

By KENNETH D. ROLT
Collegian Staff

CHESTNUT HILL – John Wright may have put a rather large thorn in the side of a few New England collegiate high hurdlers this weekend, by pulling out a narrow victory in the high hurdles at the Boston College Relays.

The freshman Minuteman jogged the last few yards in his trial heat and won easily in 14.8. Wright equaled the UMass. freshman high hurdles mark in this semi-final by racing Clifford Still from the University of Lowell, with Still just inching Wright at the tape in 14.7 seconds. To the dismay of the crowd Still false started in the final and was disqualified. This left Bob Danville from Boston University and Wright as the key men in the final. Danville got out fast at the gun but Wright appeared to match strides in the middle of the race. Over the ninth hurdle Danville was ahead by less than a foot, while over the last barrier it seemed that Wright had the lead. Using a classic lean at the tape, Wright took the honors and set a meet record with his 14.8 in the final.

Wright's upstart win wasn't the first for UMass. in the meet. Two days prior, senior Rick Walls handled the 5000 meter field and had a personal best as well. Walls ran the 3.1 miles in 14:22, a massive 26 seconds off his best this year.

Steve MacDougall had a typical ironman showing, blasting a 3:03.1 three quarter mile leg in the distance medley relay. Rick Doiron, Rick Trunfio and Paul Beaulieu also contributed to the fourth place effort, running mile, quarter, and half mile legs each. MacDougall had also placed seventh in the 5000 with a best of 14:48.

Beaulieu grabbed third in the 1500, using a "John Wright lean" to place in a very close field. Mickey Baugh found himself in a very fast 800-meter field. Baugh finished well back from the leaders but ran a swift 1:53.5, his second personal best in two weeks.

Still plagued with chronic handoffs problems, the relay team of Wright, Bill DeVarney, Rick Cady, and Trunfio managed to break the metric 400 relay mark with their 43.0 clocking. B.U. won the event in 41.0.

Dave Farnsworth of Fitchburg State College provided some real thrills with a stunning victory in the 100 meter dash.

How to buy a typewriter.

Choosing a portable typewriter isn't hard if you know what to look for. This brief guide will help you make the best choice.

Test the feel. Check the slope and height of the keyboard, the size and shape of the keys. Make sure the controls are uncrowded and easy to reach. Test the Smith-Corona® electric typewriter against other brands. We welcome the comparison.

Try the touch. A responsive touch makes for better, easier typing. Look for a touch that is prompt, easy and dependable.

Listen to the sound. If it sounds tinny, beware. This may indicate that the construction is too light.

Note the look of the type. Lines and letters should be straight. The impression should be crisp, clean and even. Print quality should be even over the page.

Look at the carrying case. Does it have double walls for air-cushioned protection? Sturdy latches and hinges? The Smith-Corona case does.

Compare prices. A typewriter that sells for less than others might be less typewriter.

If price difference is minor, choose the one that tests best.

Ask who makes it. Smith-Corona makes all its own typewriters, not true of most brands. So choose a company that will be around in the future to give your typewriter necessary service and maintenance.

A note about ribbon systems. Smith-Corona offers a unique cartridge ribbon and cartridge correction system. It lets you change ribbons in seconds and correct typing errors neatly, quickly and easily. Compare correction systems for results.

Try the Smith-Corona carbon film ribbon. We offer a re-usable nylon ribbon for ordinary typing jobs...the only kind most makers offer. We also offer carbon film ribbon in five colors. It's the kind of ribbon expensive office typewriters use, perfect for jobs requiring a crisp, professional look such as term papers or a resume. More people prefer Smith-Corona electric portables than all other brands combined. After these tests, we think you'll know why.

Trackwomen lose

By TIM TONNER
Special to the Collegian

Despite several strong performances in both the running and field events, the UMass women's track team was defeated by the trackwomen of Springfield College, 75-51, Saturday at UMass' Derby track.

Things got off to a slow start for the Minutewomen as Springfield took firsts in all five of the field events. However, UMass' Sue Fallon took a second in the shot put with a near record throw of 33'4¾". Fallon also finished fourth in the javelin throwing 117'9" behind teammate Karen Snow who finished second setting a UMass women's record with a throw of 135'5".

UMass managed second and third places in the long jump with Micki Callahan jumping 16'3¼", followed by Julie Horgan with a jump of 15'8½". The Minutewomen also picked up some points in the discus and high jump with Diane Boczanowski and Julie Horgan both placing third respectively in those events.

UMass's effort in the running events started off with a second place finish in the 100-yard dash by Angie Caouette with a time of 12 seconds, ahead of teammate Jackie Budrow who finished fourth in 12.3 seconds. The 200-meter dash featured UMass' Diana Sealey, who took first place setting a UMass women's record with a time of 25.9 seconds.

Sealey continued breaking UMass records when she won the 440-yard run with 56.8 seconds. "I was surprised with that time. I really didn't know I was going that quick," Sealey said.

UMass took the first and third place spots in the half-mile with Cyndi Martin winning in 2:16.7 and Robyn Dally just getting beat out of second place by .03 seconds to take third in 2:21.

Sophomore Judy McCrone, the top female distance runner for UMass, added yet another UMass women's record to the meet when she won the mile in 4:58.7, .01 seconds faster than the previous time for the outdoor mile. "I felt good today. I think that the nice weather had a definite effect on my performance," said McCrone. Also finishing strong in the mile from UMass was teammate Cindy Martin who finished third in 5:10.4. UMass took the one and two spots in the two mile as Trisha Moores won in 11:25.9 with McCrone placing second in 11:26.5.

Boston Bruins goaltender Gerry Cheevers sprawls to make a save in last night's game with the New York Islanders. The Bruins won in overtime, 4-3, to stay alive in the NHL playoffs. (AP Laserphoto) against UMass, as they were a victim of a Sue Peters no-hitter last week. This time Peters allowed 7 hits but Gaw scored in the first inning and UMass added five more in the fifth to clinch the win.

The Minutewomen continued to shine yesterday against State with the help of O'Connell who also increased her record on the mound to 5-0. The first three innings were uneventful for both teams with the score remaining 0-0. Finally, in the fourth inning, UMass sparked up and got five runs on three hits.

Crew tops Owls

The UMass men's crew team defeated Temple University in all five races on the Connecticut River Saturday morning.

"This really was a confidence-builder," head coach Al Flanders said. "This squad is improving with each week of competition, and the experience will make us more competitive in our upcoming races."

The win raises the varsity record to 5-2, the two losses coming in the team's last two races by margins of less than four second each. The J.V.'s won their seventh race without a loss, while the freshman team rowed to its first win.

UMass rightfielder Doug Alyward collected 12 hits in three games this weekend as the Minutemen swept the Eastern Athletic Association Tournament at Hershey, Penn.

Alyard went four for five in each game, part of a 57-hit barrage by UMass (10-6), as the Minutemen beat George Washington University 13-4, and Rutgers twice, 17-6 and 12-0, to claim the EAA tournament title.

"I've never seen a team hit harder," UMass coach Dick Bergquist said. "Our hitting was the biggest highlight of the turnament."

The three-game sweep continues an incredible early spring for the Minutemen. They are 8-2 since coming north, and last week were rated the top Division I team in New England in the coaches' poll.

In the championship game yesterday, UMass hurler Chuck Thompson (5-1) held Rutgers to a shutout for seven innings before giving way to Jim Lewis. But the Minutemen bats were steaming. UMass banged out sixteen hits including Mark Litano's lone home run of the series for the Minutemen.

Other offensive standouts for UMass included a nine for 16 performance for captain Mike McEvilly, including a double and three triples. Litano also had seven hits during the series for fourteen at bats.

Strong defense from shortstop Vin Bonanno and catcher Dave Oleksak also highlighted the tournament.

"Bonanno had an excellent series," Bergquist said. "He displayed a great deal of confidence, and made some really strong plays, and Dave Oleksak is really the unsung guy on the team."

Righthander Mark Brown evened his record at 3-3 giving up only six hits and striking out eight as the Minutemen downed George Washington in the tournament opener.

Chris Collins upped his record to 2-1 downing Rutgers in the first contest between the two teams. However, Collins was injured in the seventh inning when he was spiked while covering home plate. He was taken to the hospital and received five stitches in his leg. When he will be able to pitch next is a question.

Gorillas win, 19-4

By JONATHAN HAMILTON
Collegian Staff

If by chance you spent Saturday afternoon of your long weekend on campus and happened to be one of the estimated 400 on hand at Boyden field on an absolutely picturesque day, you might have done a double take at the Gorillas playing in different positions. Nobody, though, seemed surprised at the outcome of the day as UMass soundly thrashed Williams College, 19-4, upping its season's record to 5 wins and 2 losses.

But if you happened to stay for the whole game you would have witnessed in the fourth period the three Gorilla goalies on an attack line and attackman Skip Vosburgh play in goal. Coach Dick Garber explained, "The next six games are real tough ones so I thought I might give them a little fun yet also make them work hard in different positions."

Things went totally UMass' way from about the five-minute mark of the first period until Garber pulled his players and played musical positions with them. Chris Corin started the fireworks for UMass at 5:06. After that the scoring machine went into high gear scoring quickly and often at will. Jim Weller notched two in the first. Brian Kaley, Dave Martin, Ernie Shapiro and Pat Fogerty added single tallies to boost the UMass lead to 7-1.

If Williams felt bad after the first stanza they must have been really smarting after UMass pumped 11 more goals through the nets in the next two periods. Five of those goals were scored by freshman Dave McEntee who looked impressive. UMass passed the ball extremely well beat the Ephmen to the ball time and again out scooping them 86-64. All in all it was a superb effort. Co-captain Paul Kinnane had one goal and while the other Co-captain, Peter Schmitz, added two goals in the winning cause.

Gazelles take 6th in a row

By MAUREEN SULLIVAN
Collegian Staff

CAMBRIDGE—Defense paced the UMass women's lacrosse team to a 6-4 victory over Harvard University Saturday.

Scoring an average of 17 goals per game going into the contest, the Gazelles were held back by a stubborn Crimson zone defense. Harvard resisted UMass' man-to-man speed and agility with intercepting and guarding key players.

Harvard found daylight at 4:06 of the first half, shooting past Gazelle goalie Robin Jennings from the right side. Cari Nickerson tied a minute later with an assist from Jean Hackett. Hackett made it 2-1 with a liner from the left. Nickerson helped with the goal, her first of three assists for the day. Three minutes later, at 14:19, Harvard knotted the score at two. After a series of checking, referee calls, and attempts to penetrate each other's defenses, Maria Minicucci took an assist from Nickerson to fire in the Gazelles' third score at 21:53. The half ended with UMass ahead 3-2.

Julie McHugh and an assist from Margie Anderson put the Gazelles ahead 4-2 with just 1:13 passed on the clock. However, by the time six munites passed, Harvard tied it up again. Whitney Thayer scored the eventual game-winner at 10:24 with some help from McHugh. Thayer tallied her second, a solo strike from the goalie's left, at 16:41.

The remainder of the game saw the UMass defese bottle up the Crimson. Checking, intercepting, clearing and saves by Robin Jennings preserved the victory for the top-ranked Gazelles.

"We were under a lot of pressure," coach Pam Hixon said, "Harvard's a running, not a passing, team, and we had some trouble with it in the first half. We managed to stall and take out time, and we held out poise. It was a good win, because we don't play any 'easy' teams for the rest of the season."

The JV's lost their second of the season, falling to Harvard, 11-6. The Crimson had roared to a 7-1 lead at halftime, but UMass rallied to make it close on Linda Thayer's four goals as well as scores by Betsy Mazeral and Martha Burr.

"We were prepared for a zone," JV coach Tami Gannon said, "but Harvard didn't run it. That's why Harvard got ahead of us. However, we came back pretty well in the second half."

Mittwomen sweep to tourney title

By RANDI MARCUS and MELISSA GALLAGHER
Collegian Staff

While many UMass students were spending the long weekend basking in the sun, the softball team was out increasing its record to 10-0. The Minutewomen easily took the Vermont Invitational Tournament, Friday and Saturday, which was highlighted by a no-hitter by junior Kathy O'Connell against the University of Maine. Yesterday, UMass came home and defeated Bridgewater State College by a 6-0 margin.

Against the Black Bears of Maine, O'Connell struck out 6, and UMass went for 13 hits for the 12-0 victory. O'Connell contributed two hits to her cause, as did Mary Ann Lombardi.

Sue Peters was on the mound for the two other tourney games increasing her record to 5-0, with wins against the University of Vermont, 8-3, and the Wildcats of the University of New Hampshire, 6-3. Peters went 3 for 4 at the plate and Brenda Simmons and O'Connell had two hits each in the Vermont game.

For the Wildcats, the loss was their second this season

Racism in the Everywomens Center

Some Thoughts on Racism in the Women's Movement, Specifically the Every Women's Center

By Suman Bohm

My job as Third World Advocate at Every Women's Center was created two years ago because some heavy critisms had been leveled against the Center for having a basically white middleclass atmosphere. The needs of Third World women were going unmet. So my position was created.

When I applied for the Third World Advocate position I wrote a personal statement in which I tried to express some of what I thought. Among other things I said that I believed in:

> the emancipation of women. But for somebody to just say they are a feminist isn't enough for me. I say this because I think there are times in which women have to liberate themselves from other women. What I mean is that sometimes Third World women and even white working class women have to be liberated from middle class white "feminists" who have in fact become oppressors. If a white woman comes to me with a donkey and tries to sell it to me as a horse, I should know what I am buying, meaning that if I buy a certain brand of feminism that doesn't speak to my needs - that is, to the needs of racially oppressed people in general - then I would definitely by hurting.

As I sit here now and think about that statement and also about my work at the Center for the last two years, I realize how right my original fears were. There is no doubt that as a basically white institution the Center has tried to use its few Third World workers as tokens. But luckily the Center hasn't been very successful in controlling us, and it hasn't been able to buy us off.

My frustration over the Center's racism doesn't mean that I no longer believe in the need for Third World people to work within the Center (or other places like it). On the contrary it is important for people of color to get involved in institutions like Every Women's Center, since important services are offered there (for single mothers, for people who have been sexually abused, and so on). Therefore we have to force such institutions to open up more jobs for us. We also have to push them into using their institutional power to fight racism in the local community. At the same time that we are doing this we will be participating in, and contributing to, a just struggle: the fight for women's rights.

But although all this is necessary, it is not easy. Working in the Center, as I have found out, can drive you up the wall.

There is a certain white arrogance that has to be dealt with. Too often these white women are trying to decide whether certain Third World Women are black enough, or feminist enough, or liberated enough, or if their bedroom relations are good enough. They are always making these judgements, either consciously or unconsciously.

Such attitudes really get at you after awhile, even if like me and many of the member of the Third World Women's Task Force you have been involved in the fight for women's rights and you believe that the emancipation of women is an integral part of social change. Yet though this is my belief, working at the Center makes me want to say, "I'm not a feminist!" - by which I mean at least not the white elitist version of feminism that dominates the Center and much of the Valley. I am interested instead in the kind of down-to-earth power that grows out of Third World women and white working class women and their proven ability to survive. Such power, unlike its white middleclass counterpart, seems to have an easier understanding of the connections between sexual exploitation and other issues like race and class oppression.

The other day a progressive white woman, a feminist, was at my house for awhile. She told me she had heard that some racist things were happening at the Center. She wanted me to give her my opinion of what was going on. I told her that because of certain recent events at the Center, myself and Jamila Gaston (a sister and co-worker at the Center) found some of the white staff to be especially insensitive - some of these middleclass spoiled-brat types who think they know more about racism than Third World people do. She then asked me if a certain person was one of the people I was talking about and I said yes. After I had said this, the feminist said, "It's too bad there is so much misunderstanding. That woman you are talking about isn't racist. I know her."

When she was done with her comments, I felt deeply disappointed. How often have I either been caught in or heard about the same situation: white people telling Third World people that other whites aren't racist.

Third World women don't need white women advisors to tell them who's racist and who isn't. Third World women, and this might surprise some people, can figure out such things all by themselves.

The Center is always saying it wants more Third World participation. But when Third World people come, too often the Center gets uptight and ends up acting elitist.

Here is an example.

An Hispanic woman with eight kids was trying to go back to school. She was forty years old. She was trying to find some easy ways to get a few credits and so she came to the Center. Now the Center is supposedly a "sensitive feminist alter-

Re: Suman Bohm and Jamila Gaston

As you say "our conflict is at an impasse" but you have to remember that this is because of what you have done, not because of what we have done, You have unfortunately not confronted the full consequences of the seriousness of your unfairness and racism. It is this that is the obstacle, not us.

Your continuing refusal to drop the charges of anti-semitism is an insult. If you had either political principle of confidence in your correstness, you would have formally dropped the charges against Jamila and Suman and levelled them against the full membership of International Woman's Week. You have not done this and now it is too late. You talk about having to persist in the charges against Suman and Jamila out of political principle. You are rationalizing. You didn't treat our two members with political principle when you made uniformed accusations against them. You are being opportunist and self-protective.

It is clear to us that you are at the moment holding onto the charges against Suman and Jamila because of your own racial self-interest. You are basically trying to offset the seriousness of your racist behavior by insisting that if you made a mistake (racism) then it is balanced off by the mistakes that the Third World Women made. In this way you try to make everything look even and in so doing you undercut the fact that it is you who started the problem, not us. For white women to take such a cynical self-serving stance in a community (and country) still torn by racial hatreds is unsettling to say the least.

The fact is that the situation has already gone on too long. The racial insensitivity you have shown up to this point can no longer be erased. Because of this, and because of your refusal to drop your unwarranted charges, Jamila and Suman will continue to not attend Center staff meetings.

But we also have something else, equally important, to say.

Given the racial situation at the Center, which has been building up over a long period of time, it is necessary that Third World Women involved in the Center (both now and in the future) have some concrete safeguards against the Center's institutional racism as well as the personal white

BMCP

By Curtis Haynes Jr.

This year the Black Mass Communications Project is celebrating its 10th anniversary as a RSO group at the University of Massachusetts. As one of the leading organizations in the Third World Community in the area, BMCP proudly preserves a tradition of providing the Pioneer Valley with news, and information, and music in the Third World perspective. Their programing consists of music which varies from the spirit of the "Glory Road Gospel" and "Mellow Madness" to the Funk of the Funkman himself. This includes an unlimited array of Black Classical, Pan African and Latino music. Besides giving you the music you want to hear they also provide you with the views and perspectives of the Third World peoples concerning the real issues which are relevant in this community, and the world. In total, BMCP produces over 40 hours of programing which contnues to spread the words and music of Third World people through out the air ways at WMUA 91.1FM on your dial. In addition to broadcasting, BMCP records most performers or lecturers that appear in the valley. These tapes go into a tape library which now exceeds over 1600 tapes. These recordings are used for radio programming and are available for use and review by the public. If you have and questions regarding BMCP call 545-2426 or stop by in room 402 of the Student Union Building

We extend our congratulations to BMCP on their 10 anniversary and we remind the public if they want to hear the best in radio, with a distinctly soulful nature, tune in to BMCP.

Zimbabwe Gains Independence

Friday, 18 - Rhodesia became the independent African nation of Zimbabwe. This ended the struggle for majority rule by the country's blacks.

Rev. Canaan Banana, Zimbabwe's new president was handed the documents signed by Queen Elizabeth granting independence to the former colony. Because of its independence, Zimbabwe is expected to become the 50th member of the Organization of African Unity.

Thirty thousand people most of them black watched the gold, red, green, and black banner of the new nation being drawn to the top of the flag pole. It was reported that 230,000 whites stayed home, going to bed or doing anything rather than attending the symbolic end of their battle to continue minority rule.

One hundred and four nations were represented. They acknowledge Zimbabwe by sending their heads of state and heads of government. But most importantly was the presents of Robert Mygabe, a former guerilla leader, will head the country's first black government. The victory his party won seven weeks ago capped Britian's efforts to end the war against white rule.

Mygabe saw independence as "the final priceless reward" for the suffering. However, Mugabe saw the importance of uniting the black and white people. He recognizes that this won't be an easy task. But Mugabe is hoping that by having the same national interests, loyalty, rights and duties, that the people cannot avoid loving each other. Because the grievances of the past must now stand forgiven and forgotten.

Mugabe assumes the full powers of Prime Minister when sworn in April 18. While swearing in he added that the blacks should not repay whites for their racial discrimination.

"If ever we look to the past, let us do so for the lesson the past has taught us, namely that oppression and racism are iniquities that must never again find scope in our political and social system," said Mugabe. "Because the whites oppressed us yesterday when they had power the blacks must oppress them today because they have power, could never be a correct justification.

Evil remains evil no matter what race does the harm. Majority rule could very easily be turned into inhumane rule. If we allow history to repeat itself in reverse.

Democracy is and should remain disciplined while adhering to the law and social rules. Independence for our people does not give us the right to harass and intimidate others. It is not and was not right.

The former Prime Minister was absent from the celebrations. He agreed to allow 80 blacks seats in Parliament. He plans, however, to go on tour in South Africa.

Some whites were blantant with their dislike of the situation. they hung dead roosters around he houses. Roosters were the symbols of Mugabe's party. They also planned to burn the new Zimbabwe flag at midnight.

On the other hands the blacks displayed their happiness with the new Zimbabwe flag and portraits of Mugabe. They engraved mugs, paper hats and many other souvenirs.

The heads of many black nations came to witness that glorious day. The U.S. was represented by Averell Harriman and Andrew Young.

The only problem Mugabe's Government could foresee was the need to integrate the existing army. Mugabe and his partner from the Patriotic Front alliance, Joshua Nkomo expressed worry of renewed hostilities.●

Graduate Student Senate Elections

The Graduate Student Senate is holding general elections on May 5 and 6, to elect four officers to the Executive Committee for next fiscal year 1981. Nominations are open to any registred graduate student for the positions of President, Vice President, Treasurer and Secretary, and each position pays a $ 4,000.00 yearly salary and tuition waiver.

The President and Vice President will be elected by a general election, where graduate students with valid UMASS ID, will cast their vote in a ballot box to be located outside the Blue Wall in the Campus Center Concourse, during the two days of the elections. The Treasurer and the Secretary will be elected only by those graduate students who are members of the senate, at a general meeting on May 6, at 7:15 p.m., in room 917, Campus Center. Also the final result of the general election will be announced at this meeting. Nominations will be closed on " Candidates Night ", April 29, at 7:15 p.m., in room 917, C.C. In this meeting the candidates will be able to address their political platform to the graduate constituency, the senate and the general public.

It is essential for every progressive graduate student and important enough to every progressive undergraduate student to participate in this political event, by either running for office, casting his or her vote or supporting and helping progressive candidates during the campaign. Especially when crucial political and economic decisions will be made that may harm, or may benefit, the precious gains of our community. And definitely, only your direct involvement, can make the difference.●

WFCR

There is still work to do on Hispanic programming on WFCR. There will be a general meeting of the Coalition for Public Involvement in Public Radio (what a long name!) on Wednesday at 7pm in the Campus Center, Room 814.

The task of the Coalition is to make sure that what was agreed to in the settlement at the end of the occupation be translated into concrete reality. Anyone wishing to join in this task is invited.

There have been two meetings of a smaller group within the Coalition. It got together to elaborate a little and make more specific, the points agreed to in the settlement between the Coalition and WFCR. The draft that the smalle group came up with has to be discussed in a general assembly.

We have to make sure that when summer comes around and the students are gone, that Que Tal Amigos is not cut back again. We have to make sure that the WFCR supervisory council bring in representatives of the third world communities. We have to make sure that Sonia's job situation is settle'! (She has been doing the work of two people since Julio resigned and she hasn't received any increase in pay.(We have to make sure that the Council finds finds a suitable replacement for Sonia when she leaves. And this is only part of the list of the work that has to be done.●

ARRESTS AT UMASS-BOSTON

By Curtis Haynes Jr.

Last week-end 26 students were arrested at UMass Boston, after about 50 students had pried open a side door, to bring food into the occupiers of the Chancellor's office. When asked, Chancellor Corrigan stated that he was not willing to drop the charges of trespassing. However, Mr. Corrigan had offered to pay bail. This was a very noble jesture by the infamous Mr. Corrigan. These students are still faced with criminal charges. I repeat, these students are still faced with criminal charges. This means that they will have a record which could follow them for the rest of their lives. But , are they criminals? These students had asked for what they (as do many of us) felt were reasonable demands of the administration. Eventually, the students had exausted their means of negotiation and decided that the only way to be heard was to take action.

However, the administration has proven that if students want things done they risk the grave consequences of their actions. Yes, students used their freedom of speech to make their demands. They were not heard. The students used their freedom of choice to decide to take over the Chancellors office. Again, they were not heard. these samestudents now face a 10 day jail sentence sentence, a $75 fine, and a criminal record. And still, they were not heard. Tenure for the black faculty members has not been reinstated. Heinz Bondy, the former student advocate is not even allowed to step foot on the UMas Boston campus. Tuition is still increasing by 43 percent, financial aid is going down and there is still a sad representation of minority students on campus.

When I think of these students I think of all the political activist who have demonstrated their freedom of speech and have not been heard. Many have decided to take action and still they have not been heard. Today, many are in prison because they spoke and acted against things which they felt were wrong. But still, they were not heard.

We demonstrate against nuclear power, the draft, war, racism, repression, oppression, and the list goes on, and on, and on. Still we have not been heard.

What has happened at UMass Boston is just another example of the insensitivity of a bureaucracy, be it a college campus or a national capital, to the needs of its people.

We have got to be heard.●

che-lumumba school

The Che-Lumumba School for children, founded in 1972, one of the oldest alternative Third World schools of a progressive nature in the country, is once again in trouble. Each year tremendous costs, energies, and time required to maintain the school, at the same time as stressing its self-reliance has been very difficult. And now the situation has become even more grave. Che-Lumumba School's outlook and political philosophy is so constituted as to educate the children on the deleterious effects of Capitalism, Imperialism, Colonialism, and concomittantly sexism, racism and class oppression. Che-Lumumba School is controlled, maintained, and run by the parents in a non-hierarchical fashion.

It has been extremely difficult to maintain Che-Lumumba as an alternative school. Although Che-Lumumba is fully accredited, it receives no tax-monies and expenditures from the public treasury. Hence, all the monies for maintaining the school come from various fund-raisers of one kind or another. In the past we have just barely made enough to meet necessary costs.

Moreover, we are not only concerned with the status and future of Che-Lumumba School, we are also concerned with the status and future of other Third World and progressive organizations in the Pioneer Valley. Furthermore, we are concerned with the status and future of other organizations with Che-Lumumba. In that our situation at Che-Lumumba is dire, we propose a meeting, get-together to discuss the status and future of Che-Lumumba School, the status of other organizations, and common problems in the Five-College area and Pioneer Valley community. Please contact us as soon as possible on ideas and advice for the meeting, and confirmation of your participation.●

Housing Discrimination: Beware

By Curtis Haynes

Have you ever made a date to see an apartment but when you arrived you were told that it was just rented ? Have you ever called a rental agency and was told that they could not help you at that moment but that they will get back in touch, and they never did ? Has a landlord ever suddenly changed his mind about the amount of rent, needed for a security deposit, or asked for information that you know he doesn't ask from other people ? If any of these things has happened to you, it could be more than just bad luck, it could be discrimination.

Discrimination in housing is any action that judges you as a future tenant not on the basis of your own individual qualifications, but because you belong to a certain group. Federal and state laws make it unlawful to discriminate because of: race, creed, color, religion, national origin, sex, old age, welfare status, veteran status, blindness, children, marital status. There are exceptions to this such as two family houses where the owner lives and buildings with elderly tenants. However, it is unlawful to discriminate on the basis of race in all types of housing.

If you feel that you are in the position that you might be discriminated against make sure that you are alert about any situation that arises that could possibly be discrimination against you. This is not to say that all of the above actions are discrimination, but be aware that they may be. If you are looking for an apartment make sure that you plan ahead. This includes having clearly in your mind the questions that you will want to ask. If you make a phone call about an apartment make sure that you get the name of the person you talk to whether that person is the owner of the owner's agent. You should keep a copy of the ad you saw and make a note of the date and time you called about the apartment. When you are talking on the phone talk about yourself as little as possible while getting as much information about the apartment as you can. If the landlord insists and keeps on asking you questions, you might say that you have an appointment to see another apartment and don't have time to talk, or that you don't was to discuss personal matters over the phone. If you do get turned down over the phone and support discrimination get some counseling RIGHT AWAY.

When you actually do see the landlord you should bring along proof of your good credit. When you do look the apartment over, get as much information as you need, including confirmation about the rent, what utilities you would have to pay for, when you could have the apartment, etc. There are some questions that a landlord may ask you which shelhe has a right to know. Shelhe has a right to know how many people will be living in the apartment, and what source of income you have. He can also ask if you will be a good neighbor and not destroy the property. Landlords also have a right to ask you to fill out an application, as long as shelhe does that for all of his prospective tenants. If you have any reason to believe that you have been discriminated against seek legal advice right away. Discrimination is often not easy to prove, and it will take your help, if anything is to be done.●

native institution" that understands that different kinds of people have different needs, and that it isn't only academic credentials that are important. But when this Hispanic woman came looking for help none of the staff took the time to talk to her about her life-experiences and the kinds of insights these experiences had helped her develop. Instead they started asking her a whole bunch of scary heavy-sounding questions - what are your formal job qualifications ? How many academic papers do you plan to write ? etc. When they found out she didn't have much education and was not able to write super-good English, they told her, "Too bad, we can't help you, you will have to leave not, sorry, good-bye."

This is what the so-called "collaborative and non-hierarchical and non-racist structure" of the Every Women's Center finally comes to: institutional racism and elitism. In the end all the fancy words go out the window and most of the staff act like what they are trained to be: administrators and managerial types who love nothing better than having power over those who are not quite as well off as they are.

If you're Third Wold, watch out.

It has been very difficult at the Center trying to create unity between Third World women and white women. This is too bad for many reasons. The main problem is that Every Women's Center has failed to deal seriously with either its institutional of personal racism. Because of this the Center gives off a tone of white privilege, of a lot of wordiness but little action. Too many of the white staff have a good deal in common with their secret partners: the white male administrators who run this country.

But whiteness in itself is not the sole problem,

A Short History of Palestine

Part 1
Why Israel can't have Democracy
By Foad Vafaei

Palestine is an ancient land. This land which is part of the Arab world and part of the middle east, is today the center of gravity of the most progressive revolutionary Arab movement in the area which is directed against the U.S. backed Zionism.

Palestine was under the Ottoman colonial rule until 1914. After the World War I, it was under the control of the British colonialism and up to 1947, when the British colonialism began, it stayed under they British control. Formally the British colonialists were claiming to be helping the formation of a Palestinian government. But in reality they were helping the creation of the "Zionist" colonial settler state.

The international Zionist agencies were trying since the late 19th century to invade Palestine, following their delerious chauvinist racists objectives. "Hertzel," one the founders of Zionism, was trying hard to gain the support of Western European capitalist ruling classes and the Ottoman Feudalist government. In a letter for an Ottoman Sultan, he wrote that "the future Israeli state would be able to save the European civilization from Asian savagery."

After the World War I, and the fall of the Ottoman empire, the Zionist leaders turned their faces to the British colonialist for help. What happened next, was led to the expulsion of the indigenous Palestinian people and setting up of the semitheocratic, racist, capitalist Zionist state of Israel.

"Hertzel" wrote is his diary that: "When we invade that land, we will confiscate the property in our parts, and by depriving the Arabs from being employed in our land, we will expell them...!"

The immigration of the Jews which was organized by the international Zionist agencies, was intensified after the World War I.

In 1898, the Jews made up 7 percent of the population in Palestine. But in 1947 this amount had inceased to 33 percent of the whole population. And that was supported by the British colonialist. The same racist attitudes which helped the European grand bourgeoine to create colonies around the world, created the discrimination against the Palestinians in Palestine. Severe pressures were exerted upon the Palestinian peasant by the British rulers. In the period which ended by the creation of the Israeli state, the Zoinist terrorist gangs such as Irgun (the present Israeli prime minister "Begin" was one of their members) were created by the Zionists and tolerated by the British. Later those reactionary terrorist groups became the core of the Israeli army.

Under the British rule, around 10,000 Palestinians were killed and the Palestinian political parties were not allowed to exist.

In 1942 (May 11), the international Zionist congress was formed in New York. There, it was decided that following the invasion of Palestine and expulsion of the Palestinians. Palestine would become the "Jewish homeland." This aggressive decision was also backed by the U.S. and British imperialist. In 1947 (Nov 29), under the U.S. pressure, the United Nations, supported the idea of the "division" of Palestine. (Unfortunately even the Soviet Union recognized that State of Israel and with this, the reactionary bourgeois chauvinistic movement of Zionism, gained a certain prestige. This action of the Soviet Union, was a blatant denial of the LENINIST principle of right of self determination for the oppressed nationality (i.e. Palestinian people).)

After the creation of the state of Israel, the defenceless people of Palestine were left under the Zionist attacks. This property were expropriated and their homes were destroyed under the Zionist terrorist attacks.

Nathan Chofshy one of the poineers of Zionism, in an open letter to the editor of the "Jewish Newsletter" in Feb 1949, wrote: "We, the old Jewish immigrants, who witnessed the war, can tell you how we forced the Arabs to leave their towns and villages. We forced out some at gun point, and some by false promises. Here a people lived for 1300 years. We came and forced the indigenous Arabs to become homeless refugees. And we still dare to libel them. Rather than being ashamed of what we did, and help the refugees, we are being proud of what we did!!!

Hence, there are striking similarities between Zionism and Apartheid they all were established on an ethnocentric and racially exclusive ideology considering their people as the superior race. Zionism has always pretended to be blind to the national existence of the Palestinian Arabs and subject to the "moral schizophrenia" involved in setting up an exclusively Jewish society in Palestine.

The ground for the Zionist movement was set gradually among the European Jews in the later 19th and early 20th century in part as a reaction the Anti-Semitic campaigns in European. However, Zionist ideology compliments rather than challenges the myths spread by the Anti-Semitist demoguogues. Because Zionism accepts the fundamental tenet of Jew as forever alien to gentile societies. The Jewish sections of the European capitalist classes, who were driven out of business because of Anti-Semitism, needed their own national bases to exploit. The Jewish and Arab working class in Israel fulfill this need today.

However Israel as a colonial settler state (similar to South Africa) can not be studied but in the content of its relations with the U.S. Because Israel plays the role of a watch dog for the interest of profit mongerous mult-national corporations. The former Israeli prime minister Golda Meyer, once said: I don't want the Jewish people to be soft, anti-colonial or anti-militarist because then it will perish." (quoted in Revue de Defence Nationale, Paris, Act 1969).

To this day the Israeli military machine is carrying out frequent bombing and massacres of the defenceless Palestinians. It has followed policies which led to the expulsion of an estimated 1,400,000 Palestinians. The Palestinians who were not driven out are now treated the same way as blacks are treated in South Africa. (50 percent of the manufacturing workers in Israel are Palestinians.)

Israel since its very day of creation has identified itself more and more with the U.S. (imperialists) interests in the area. As Golda Meyer put it: "Israel is really a safeguard for the maintenance of American interests and the Islamic regimes which are loyal to them" (quoted in Ha'aretz in March 7, 1973). Many bitter examples can be cited. The cooperation of Israeli secret police with the Shah's SAVAK, with the Anti-Semitic fascist regime of Argentina, former dictator Somorga, South Africa, Etc...

So we see that the very existence of the Israeli government is antagonistic to every revolutionary movement in the world by its very nature.

In next week we'll analyze the relations of Israel to the U.S. and the creation of PLO.●

The Insanities of Anti-Semitism

Foad Vafaei

One of the oldest and most disastrous types of racism is Anti-Semitism.

At the institutional level, Anti-Semitism grew up in early 19th century in Europe. The reasons of its existence are very complicated. Anti-Semitism, is intrisically interconnected with the complicated and the extreme inequalities inherent in it. Under capitalism, Anti-Semitism became institutionalized and took social, economic and political forms and dimensions.

The roots of Anti-Semitism go deep to the middle ages. e.g. the economic positions occupied by the Jews: at a time when usury was prohibited for the Christians, that was not the case for the Jews (because of their religious laws). Consequently frequently many positions of bankers and usurers were filled by the Jews. In the 19th, Europe was the scene of the development of capitalism i.e. a social order in which a small minority of the capitalists unrich themselves by taking the goods made by the workers and selling for profits. This means creation of wealth for the capitalists and poverty for the majority. Vast anti-capitalist movements were

Placid Neighbors: Chinese City and Taiwans Islands

by Fox Butterfield
By From The New York Times

Across the mouth of the harbor of Xiamen , A Chinese port city, is squat a half-dozen small islands that any ship going in or out must pass. Although it has been 20 years since the Communists took the city, known then as Amoy, Chinese Nationalist troops from Taiwan still control the islands.

On a clear day Nationalist flags are visible, sprouting brazenly above the larger islands. And when the wind is right late at night, some of the 900,000 residents of the city can hear propaganda broadcasts beamed by the Nationalists.

The islands are an incongruous reminder that the struggle between the Communists and the Nationalists, which began in 1927, is still not over.

But the Communists, with an army of four million men and a population of nearly a billion people behind them, have made no attempt to seize these vulnerable outcroppings since 1958, when a six-week bombardment and attack on the biggest of the chain, Quemoy, failed to dislodge the Nationalist defenders. The islands became a major issue in the 1960 Presidential election when Vice President Richard M. Nixon and Senator John F. Kennedy debated the issue on television.

Pekings Begins a Peace Offensive

In the last year Peking has started a new effort to try to recover the islands and Taiwan through 'peaceful reunification,' rather than by what the Communists used to call 'liberation.' In a major policy speech in January, Deng Xiaoping, China's most powerful leader, declared that the return of Taiwan was one of the most important tasks for Chinas in the 1980's.

Evidentially as part of Peking's new policy, a group of Western correspondents was allowed to visit Xiamen today, the first time foreign reporters have been here since 1949.

There is little to suggest that the city is part of a military front, as Peking has often termed it. An occasional burst of machine-gun practice fire could be heard. And further north, outside Fuzhou, MIG-19 fighter planes swooped in low over the ripening green rice paddies. But there are fewer soldiers on the streets here than in the suburbs of Pekings.

"Quemoy is just not something we think about very oftenl," said a third-year student of English at Xiamen University. Several buildings on the campus were hit by Nationalist artillery in 1958, the last time Taiwan troops shelled the city.

Peking pledged not to fire at Quemoy again in January 1979, when it formulated its program for peaceful reunification. The plan included calls by the Communists for postal service, airline flights and maritime links between Taiwan and the mainland.

One of the few reminders here of Xiamen's unique position was a graphic display by a local court of the execution of a man named Zhang Qingfu for stabbing another man during a quarrel over Mr. Zhang's demand that he be given a boat to flee to one of the Nationalist islands.

Taiwan appears to have had another, broader impact on Xiamen, as it has on much of China - instilling an interest among many Communists in emulating Taipei's economic miracle of the last two decades. City officials are trying to work out plans to set up an export processing zone where foreign companies could invest. It would resemble similar projects across the Formosa Strait.

Province Has Links to Taiwan

There are strong affinities between Taiwan and Fujian, the province in which Xiamen is situated. Eight percent of Taiwan's 18 million originally migrated from the southern part of the province and speak the local dialect, a fact the Communists like to recall. Even the architecture of the peasants houses, with sharply curved tiled roofs and gaudily painted windows, are similar.

In an interview, a deputy governor of Fujian, Wen Fushan, repeated Peking's pledge that Taiwan could retain its economic and social system and its armed forces if the Nationalist Government would renounce its claim to being the Republic of China. The official stressed that this was a "sincere, honest offer."

The Communists are also anxious to avert any thoughts of independence on Taiwan, which could cause them more trouble than the current standoff with the Nationalists.

A local officaial here suggested one reason why China has not seized the small islands in the harbor is that such an action would sever Taiwans links with the mainland and tend to foster ideas fo independence.

To underscore their interest in Taiwan, the Communists have reopened a museum on another island in the harbor dedicated to a quixotic character named Koxinga, or Zheng Chenggong in Chinese, who was born in 1624 to a Chinese pirate father and a Japanese mother. With 25,000 men he took back Taiwan from the Dutch, who had held it for several decades.

An exhibit points out that Koxinga waited until he knew the Dutch would be unable to recive help from their base in Java, now part of Indonesia. Does Peking now feel confident, after the normalization of relations with the United States last year, that Washington would not interfere with an attack on Taiwan ●

Dissidents Indicted

The government of Taiwan has indicted an additional 33 members of the political opposition in connection with last December's mass protests in Kaohsiung. The trial of eight opposition leaders charged with sedition has ended, meanwhile, with a verdict expected soon.

The 33 are among hundreds detained after 10,000 Taiwanese battled police in protest of the government's refusal to allow a Human Rights Day rally advocating free elections. They were transferred from military to civil courts after the government evidently decided there was insufficient evidence for charges of sedition. They face up to 10 years in prison for such offenses as "directing crowds to make violent threats against military personnel."

Prosecutors in the sedition trial of the eight prominent opposition figures last month withdrew their appeal for lenient sentences and asked the five military judges to issue death sentences and asked the five military judges to issue death senteces. This followed the retraction of "confessions" by all eight defendants, who told the public hearings that they had been threatened and tortured into signing the confessions.

Chinese leaders moved to muffle political dissent completely yesterday by yesterday by calling fo r an end to press freedom, public rallies and critical wall posters. The crackdown was propsesdossedsed by the 120-member standing committee of the Parliament of National Peoples's Congress. Their recommendations are almost cetrtain to be adopted by the Congress, which is expected to meet in a full sessio in Aune ●

How to relieve Headache Pain with Finger Pressure

About two months ago I found myself involved in a conversation with a young man who suffered from severe headaches. After our conversation I assured him that I would try to find additional information pertaining to his problem. So you could say I am dedicating this weeks column to him. What I did find proved to be quite interesting. For one, headaches can be caused by allergic reactions to particular foods such as dairy products, nuts, and chocolate. But for those of us who are not allergic to these products our headaches could have one of three other origins. The most common is tension derived from lifes daily stress. Another possibility that is often over looked concerns injuries, that may have occured years ago. An example would be an injury that occured in childhood where nerve endings were damaged. On occassion these nerves will flare up causing servere headaches for know apparent reason. The third posible cause of headaches is nutrition. If your diet lacks niacin which is found in fish, poultry, peanuts, beans, organ meats and whole wheat products your chances of developing a headache increase greatly. If you believe this to be your problem 25 to 50mg of niacin a day should alleviate the problem.

Well now that we know what may be causing that nasty headache how do we cure it. Well you could always go into the medicine cabinet and pull out a bottle of aspirin. The brave ones who can't or don't believe in taking aspirin can suffer through the duration of the headache. But dear readers their is yet another method and it is called shiatsu. Shiatsu is an ancient therapy that is older than Japan's recorded history. The headache is relieve by using the fleshy part of the thumbs to bear down on a series of pressure points along the skull and the back of the neck. With this method headaches and hangovers can be relieved in as little as a minute and a half. In some cases, a third treatment is required.

How shiatsu works still remains a mystery although their are several theories. For instance the hard pressure exerted by the thumbs may cause extra blood to cir culate through the painful area. The blood acts as the natural cleanser of the body, bringing antibodies and oxgen to the area and removing waste products and carbon dioxide. A second possibility is that shiatsu may act like acupuncture, stimulating certain nerves meridians and motivating the body to heal itself. Others suggest that when pressure is put on the head, natural substances called endorphins are released in the brain. Endorphins act as pain inhibitors which block the pain signal throughout the body. Another theory is based on the physics concept that every action has an equal and opposite reaction. With a hangover a person has restricted blood vessels and the shiatsu pressure causes the blood vessels to expand and relieve the pain.

To relieve headache : draw an imaginary line from center of forehead to base of skull and apply pressure to each point. Then press points from crown of head to temples, then, press points on each side of head simultaneously. (Points should be about an inch apart). Then find middle rear of ear lobe and press on points going upward. The first point is two inches from lobe, the next is half the distance to center, the third is center or medulla. Then follow spinal column to shoulders, pressing next to spine (not on it).

When you reach an area that is extremly painful press gently and return to the point later. When doing the shiatsu you should not press no more than three seconds when working in areas of the neck and above, and no more than seven seconds on each area below the neck.

This method is well worth learning and remembering it can be done in a short period of time, it cost nothing, but the greatest benefit comes in terms of not having to use aspirin and facing the chemical effects they cause to your body.

BRIGADA ANTONIO MACEO

BREVE HISTORIA

A finales de los sesenta se empiezan a manifestar en el exilio cubano posturqsanalisis politicos distintos a los que tradicionalmente se habian manifestado hacia la revolucion Cubana. El exilio emoezaba a perder su caracter monolitico. Varios factores contribuyeron a ese fenomeno, tales como los diferentes motivos para abandonar el pais, la realidad socio-politica en que nos dasarollamos fuera de Cuba; la realidad internacional y por ultimo, el desarollo y consolidacion del proceso revolucionaria cubano.

Como ere de esperase, han sido los jovenes los que han jugado un papael fundamental en el desarollo de estos cambios. A lo largo de los primeros anos de la decada del setenta, diferentes groupos de jovenes hicieron declaraciones publicas con respecto a la Revolucion Cubana en lugares como Nueva York, Nueva Jersey, Boston, Miami, Gainsville y Puerto Rico, entre otras. Esas posiciones iban encaminadas a defender nuesto derecho a conocer el proceso revolucionario cubano, asi como a exigir una mayor apertura y communicacion con el mismo.

En 1974 surgen revistas como Joven Cuba y Areito, que abren las posibilidades de materializar dichas posiciones.A unos cambios paulatinos dentro del exilio cubano, revistas como Joven Cuba y Areito, que abren las posibilidades de materializar dichas posiciones. A unos cambios paulatinos dentro del exilio cubano, se suman cambios de actitud en la Revolucion que permiten un mayor acercamiento y comunicacion. De ese acercamiento y comunicacion, se crea, en 1977, la Brigada Antonio Maceo, integrada por jovenes cubanos residentes fuera de Cuba, que tiene como proposito el manifestar su oposicion al bloque contra Cuba, asi como el facilitar el conocimiento del proceso a traves de un contacto directo con esa realidad. Actualmente La Brigada esta organizada en E.U., Puerto Rico, Mexico, Venezuela y Espana.

Hace anos que venimos planteando la necesidad de aceptar el caracter irreversible de la Revolucion como un primer paso de acercamiento entre los cubanos del exterior y los de Cuba. Con ese espiritu fuimos a Cuba en el primer contigente de la Brigada, en diciembre de 1977 hasta enero de 1978. Fue en ese viaje que con nuestro ejemplo, posiciones e ideas, logramos impactar positivamente a la direccion de la Revolucion, contribuyendo a un cambio de politica hacia aquellos que por diferentes razones abanonaron su pais.

A finales de 1978 el gobierno cubano tomo una decision historica al manifestar su interes de dialogar con miembros representativos de la comunidad cubana en el exterior sobre asuntos de interes mutuo. Sesenta y cinco miembros de la comunidad en el exterior primero, y luego 140, participaron en las dos sesiones que se efectuaron en L Habana, durante los meses de noviembre y diciembre. El Dialogo adelanto significativamente una solucion la situacion de los presos politicos, la reunificacion familiar y las visitas a Cuba de los cubanos residentes fuera del pais.

La Brigada estuvo debidamente representada en las secciones del Dialogo Permanente, que estrechara los lazos entre los cubanos en el exterior y los de le Isla. Propusimos el intercambio educacional, cultural, deportivo, cientifico y de cualquier otra indole, entre jovenes cubanos de ambas comunidades; abogamos por el establecimiento de una progama de becas a todos los niveles, en Cuba y en otra paises, como un medio de lograr una mayor compresion entre los jovenes; instamos a la partipacion reciproca de jovenes en activadades, reuniones y congresos en Cuba y en nuestras comunidades; planteamos, por ultimo, la restitucion de los derechos constitucionales a los cubanos en el exterior, de forma tal que puedan participar en la vida social, politica y economica de nuestra patria, asi como el derecho a vivir en Cuba, esto es el regreso permanente para los que asi lo deseen.

Hemos avanzado en el Dialogo Permanente con los contigentes y con varios grupos que han visitado Cuba con el proposito de conocer a fondo los logros y las dificultades del proceso revolucionario. En el caso de los contigentes, hemos hecho un modesta aporte al bienestar del pueblo cubano mediante nuestro trabajo en la construccion de viviendas. Ademas, hemos organizado los 'Maceitos' para ninos cubanos o hijos de cubanos que viajan a Cuba conjuntamente con la Brigada y se alojan en campamentos de pioneros, donde desarollan actividades propias de su edad.

El 28 de abril de 1979, elementos terroristas asesinaron en San Juan de Puerto Rico, a uno de los companeros mas valiosos de nuestra organizacion, el companero Carlos Muniz Varela. Carlos dirigia en esos momentos la agancia de Viajes Varadero, cuyo proposito es el facilitar los viajes de los cubanos del exterior a Cuba, como parte del proceso de reunificacion familiar que se incio en Cuba con el Dialogo. Los terroristas se equivocaron al pensar que este asesinato detendria los viajes a Cuba y el proceso del Dialogo. El repudio y la indignacion se hicieron sentir en todas aquellas ciudades y paises donde residen cubanos. Ante su memoria recordamos las palabras de Jose Marti: 'La muerte da jefes; la muerte da lecciones y ejemplos. Asi de estos enlaces continuos, invisibles, se va tejiendo el alma de la Patria'.

Nuestra organizacion es joven. Nos sentimos confiados y esperanzados, seuros de que seguiremos avanzado, comprometidos con el presente y el futuro; para ello contamos con un ejemplo, el de nuestro entrañable amigo, hermano y companero, Carlos Muniz Varela.

END US BLOCKADE AGAINST CUBA

For the past twenty one years, the Cuban people have been engaged in an all-out effort to develop their economy and to improve their standard of living. In many ways, they have been successful. Today they benefit from one of the most complete and far reaching programs in health care and education in Latin America. The road, however, has not been an easy one. Underdevelopment is not wiped out in a generation (or in two or three for that matter). The Third World can attest to that. But, the Cuban people have also had to suffer the consequences stemming from the U.S. imposed embargo.

During the sixties, Cuba saw her commercial opportunities severely limited. The embargo not only prohibited trade with the U.S. and U.S. corporations abroad, but also subjected third countries to penalties if they traded with Cuba. At the end of the decade, for example, France explored the possibility of buying nickel from Cuba.

In the early seventies, some changes began to take place. The embargo had failed insofar as it had not brought about the downfall of the Castro government. On the contrary, the Cuban Revolution was being consolidated. By 1973, the OAS resolved that its members were free to establish diplomatic and commercial relations with Cuba. Western Europe and Japan increased their trade with Cuba. The U.S. Department of Commerce allowed the Argentine subsidiaries of Ford Motor Company and General Motors Corporation to sell cars to Cuba. It is about time that the embargo be lifted. It is obsolete and only brings on added burdens to the Cuban people who are struggling against underdevelopment. It is also an obstacle to the free exchange of and ideas between the peoples of the two countries, which constitutes an infringement of the rights of U.S. citizens and limits the opportunities for enrichment of both nations that would result from increased travel and contact. Moreover, had there been no embargo, Americans would have benefitted from the extra jobs the contracts granted to Ford and General Motors created in Argentina.

An end to the embargo, however, is only a first step. The U.S. should proceed to normalize relations with Cuba. In an era of detente, it certainly is ironic that our government should hold out such a hostile policy towards Cuba. If our government has differences with that of Cuba, the only way to resolve them is by opening up communication channels. Ideological and political differences need not be an obstacle to such channels. The U.S. maintains diplomatic and commercial relations with the Soviet Union and China in the interests of world peace. Why not with Cuba• We cannot simply ignore a country that has diplomatic and commercial relations with 120 other countries throughout the world, moreover, the country that will be presiding over the Non-Aligned Movement for the next three years. This only serves to further isolate the U.S. from the developing countries, particularly from the nations of Latin America.

Last year, for example, the Cuban government initiated a Dialogue with the exile communities in the United States, Puerto Rico and other countries. Most exiles are by no means sympathetic to the Revolution, and yet, the Dialogue has resulted in the freedom of most political prisoners, the reunification of Cuban families and the right of exiles to visit Cuba. By normalizing relations, the Cuban government and the exiles, together, took a constructive step in improving human rights.

Lastly, the U.S. military holds a base in Guantanamo Bay in the southeastern coast of Cuba. It does so against the will of the Cuban people. To them, it is a constant reminder that a powerful nation has repeatedly violated their national sovereignty. The U.S. military base in Guantanamo has no strategic importance. Why does the U.S. government stay in Guantanamo•

We urge President Carter to take some constructive steps in easing tensions with the Cuban government. Bringing an end to the embargo, proceeding to normalize relations with Cuba and terminating U.S. presence in Guantanamo would significantly contribute to the renewal of the traditionally warm relations that have existed between our peoples.

"When Cuba becomes independent, I will ask for permission to fight for the freedom of Puerto Rico."

Support for Cuban revolution

Sat. April 19th.

Hundreds of thousands of Cubans passed the peruvian Embassy today, demonstrating their solidarity with the revolution, and celebrating the 19th anniversary of the heroic defeat of the U.S. backed C.I.A. invasion of the Bay of Pigs. Reports indicate that as many as one million people will pass by the Peruvian Embassy in Miramar, and that the people began marching as early as 6 a.m... Shouts of "Fidel!" and " Out with the parasites!" resounded as the people of Cuba marched in solidarity with Fidel.

The Communists are also anxious to avert any thoughts of independence on Taiwan, which could cause them more trouble than the current standoff with the Nationalists.

A local officaial here suggested one reason why China has not seized the small islands in the harbor is that such an action would sever Taiwans links with the mainland and tend to foster ideas fo independence.

To underscore their interest in Taiwan, the Communists have reopened a museum on another island in the harbor dedicated to a quixotic character named Koxinga, or Zheng Chenggong in Chinese, who was born in 1624 to a Chinese pirate father and a Japanese mother. With 25,000 men he took back Taiwan from the Dutch, who had held it for several decades.

An exhibit points out that Koxinga waited until he knew the Dutch would be unable to recive help from their base in Java, now part of Indonesia. Does Peking now feel confident, after the normalization of relations with the United States last year, that Washington would not interfere with an attack on Taiwan ●

The government of Taiwan has indicted an additional 33 members of the political opposition in connection with last December's mass protests in Kaohsiung. The trial of eight opposition leaders charged with sedition has ended, meanwhile, with a verdict expected soon.

The 33 are among hundreds detained after 10,000 Taiwanese battled police in protest of the government's refusal to allow a Human Rights Day rally advocating free elections. They were transferred from military to civil courts after the government evidently decided there was insufficient evidence for charges of sedition. They face up to 10 years in prison for such offenses as "directing crowds to make violent threats against military personnel."

Prosecutors in the sedition trial of the eight prominent opposition figures last month withdrew their appeal for lenient sentences and asked the five military judges to issue death sentences and asked the five military judges to issue death senteces. This followed the retraction of "confessions" by all eight defendants, who told the public hearings that they had been threatened and tortured into signing the confessions.

Chinese leaders moved to muffle political dissent completely yesterday by yesterday by calling fo r an end to press freedom, public rallies and critical wall posters. The crackdown was propsesdossedsed by the 120-member standing committee of the Parliament of National Peoples's Congress. Their recommendations are almost cetrtain to be adopted by the Congress, which is expected to meet in a full sessio in Aune ●

About two months ago I found myself involved in a conversation with a young man who suffered from severe headaches. After our conversation I assured him that I would try to find additional information pertaining to his problem. So you could say I am dedicating this weeks column to him. What I did find proved to be quite interesting. For one, headaches can be caused by allergic reactions to particular foods such as dairy products, nuts, and chocolate. But for those of us who are not allergic to these products our headaches could have one of three other origins. The most common is tension derived from lifes daily stress. Another possibility that is often over looked concerns injuries, that may have occured years ago. An example would be an injury that occured in childhood where nerve endings were damaged. On occassion these nerves will flare up causing servere headaches for know apparent reason. The third posibble cause of headaches is nutrition. If your diet lacks niacin which is found in fish, poultry, peanuts, beans, organ meats and whole wheat products your chances of developing a headache increase greatly. If you believe this to be your problem 25 to 50mg of niacin a day should alleviate the problem.

Well now that we know what may be causing that nasty headache how do we cure it. Well you could always go into the medicine cabinet and pull out a bottle of aspirin. The brave ones who can't or don't believe in taking aspirin can suffer through the duration of the headache. But dear readers their is yet another method and it is called shiatsu. Shiatsu is an ancient therapy that is older than Japan's recorded history. The headache is relieve by using the fleshy part of the thumbs to bear down on a series of pressure points along the skull and the back of the neck. With this method headaches and hangovers can be relieved in as little as a minute and a half. In some cases, a third treatment is required.

How shiatsu works still remains a mystery although their are several theories. For instance the hard pressure exerted by the thumbs may cause extra blood to circulate through the painful area. The blood acts as the natural cleanser of the body, bringing antibodies and oxgen to the area and removing waste products and carbon dioxide. A second possibility is that shiatsu may act like acupuncture, stimulating certain nerves meridians and motivating the body to heal itself. Others suggest that when pressure is put on the head, natural substances called endorphins are released in the brain. Endorphins act as pain inhibitors which block the pain signal throughout the body. Another theory is based on the physics concept that every action has an equal and opposite reaction. With a hangover a person has restricted blood vessels and the shiatsu pressure causes the blood vessels to expand and relieve the pain.

To relieve headache : draw an imaginary line from center of forehead to base of skull and apply pressure to each point. Then press points from crown of head to temples, then, press points on each side of head simultaneously. (Points should be about an inch apart). Then find middle rear of ear lobe and press on points going upward. The first point is two inches from lobe, the next is half the distance to center, the third is center or medulla. Then follow spinal column to shoulders, pressing next to spine (not on it).

When you reach an area that is extremly painful press gently and return to the point later. When doing the shiatsu you should not press no more than three seconds when working in areas of the neck and above, and no more than seven seconds on each area below the neck.

This method is well worth learning and remembering it can be done in a short period of time, it cost nothing, but the greatest benefit comes in terms of not having to use aspirin and facing the chemical effects they cause to your body.

¡UNETE!

BREVE HISTORIA

A finales de los sesenta se empiezan a manifestar en el exilio cubano posturqsanalisis politicos distintos a los que tradicionalmente se habian manifestado hacia la revolucion Cubana. El exilio emoezaba a perder su caracter monolitico. Varios factores contribuyeron a ese fenomeno, tales como los diferentes motivos para abandonar el pais, la realidad socio-politica en que nos dasarollamos fuera de Cuba; la realidad internacional y por ultimo, el desarollo y consolidacion del proceso revolucionaria cubano.

Como ere de esperase, han sido los jovenes los que han jugado un papael fundamental en el desarollo de estos cambios. A lo largo de los primeros anos de la decada del setenta, diferentes groupos de jovenes hicieron declaraciones publicas con respecto a la Revolucion Cubana en lugares como Nueva York, Nueva Jersey, Boston, Miami, Gainsville y Puerto Rico, entre otras. Esas posiciones iban encaminadas a defender nuesto derecho a conocer el proceso revolucionario cubano, asi como a exigir una mayor apertura y communicacion con el mismo.

En 1974 surgen revistas como Joven Cuba y Areito, que abren las posibilidades de materializar dichas posiciones. A unos cambios paulatinos dentro del exilio cubano, revistas como Joven Cuba y Areito, que abren las posibilidades de materializar dichas posiciones. A unos cambios paulatinos dentro del exilio cubano, se suman cambios de actitud en la Revolucion que permiten un mayor acercamiento y comunicacion. De ese acercamiento y comunicacion, se crea, en 1977, la Brigada Antonio Maceo, integrada por jovenes cubanos residentes fuera de Cuba, que tiene como proposito el manifestar su oposicion al bloque contra Cuba, asi como el facilitar el conocimiento del proceso a traves de un contacto directo con esa realidad. Actualmente La Brigada esta organizada en E.U., Puerto Rico, Mexico, Venezuela y Espana.

Hace anos que venimos planteando la necesidad de aceptar el caracter irreversible de la Revolucion como un primer paso de acercamiento entre los cubanos del exterior y los de Cuba. Con ese espiritu fuimos a Cuba en el primer contigente de la Brigada, en diciembre de 1977 hasta enero de 1978. Fue en ese viaje que con nuestro ejemplo, posiciones e ideas, logramos impactar positivamente a la direccion de la Revolucion, contribuyendo a un cambio de politica hacia aquellos que por diferentes razones abanonaron su pais.

A finales de 1978 el gobierno cubano tomo una decision historica al manifestar su interes de dialogar con miembros representativos de la comunidad cubana en el exterior sobre asuntos de interes mutuo. Sesenta y cinco miembros de la comunidad en el exterior primero, y luego 140, participaron en las dos sesiones que se efectuaron en L Habana, durante los meses de noviembre y diciembre. El Dialogo adelanto significativamente una solucion la situacion de los presos politicos, la reunificacion familiar y las visitas a Cuba de los cubanos residentes fuera del pais.

La Brigada estuvo debidamente representada en las secciones del Dialogo Permanente, que estrechara los lazos entre los cubanos en el exterior y los de le Isla. Propusimos el intercambio educacional, cultural, deportivo, cientifico y de cualquier otra indole, entre jovenes cubanos de ambas comunidades; abogamos por el establecimiento de una progama de becas a todos los niveles, en Cuba y en otra paises, como un medio de lograr una mayor compresion entre los jovenes; instamos a la partipacion reciproca de jovenes en activadades, reuniones y congresos en Cuba y en nuestras comunidades; planteamos, por ultimo, la restitucion de los derechos constitucionales a los cubanos en el exterior, de forma tal que puedan participar en la vida social, politica y economica de nuestra patria, asi como el derecho a vivir en Cuba, esto es el regreso permanente para los que asi lo deseen.

Hemos avanzado en el Dialogo Permanente con los contigentes y con varios grupos que han visitado Cuba con el proposito de conocer a fondo los logros y las dificultades del proceso revolucionario. En el caso de los contigentes, hemos hecho un modesta aporte al bienestar del pueblo cubano mediante nuestro trabajo en la construccion de viviendas. Ademas, hemos organizado los 'Maceitos' para ninos cubanos o hijos de cubanos que viajan a Cuba conjuntamente con la Brigada y se alojan en campamentos de pioneros, donde desarollan actividades propias de su edad.

El 28 de abril de 1979, elementos terroristas asesinaron en San Juan de Puerto Rico, a uno de los companeros mas valiosos de nuestra organizacion, el companero Carlos Muniz Varela. Carlos dirigia en esos momentos la agancia de Viajes Varadero, cuyo proposito es el facilitar los viajes de los cubanos del exterior a Cuba, como parte del proceso de reunificacion familiar que se incio en Cuba con el Dialogo. Los terroristas se equivocaron al pensar que este asesinato detendria los viajes a Cuba y el prceso del Dialogo. El repudio y la indignacion se hicieron sentir en todas aquellas ciudades y paises donde residen cubanos. Ante su memoria recordamos las palabras de Jose Marti: 'La muerte da jefes; la muerte da lecciones y ejemplos. Asi de estos enlaces continuos, invisibles, se va tejiendo el alma de la Patria'.

Nuestra organizacion es joven. Nos sentimos confiados y esperanzados, seuros de que seguiremos avanzado, comprometidos con el presente y el futuro; para ello contamos con un ejemplo, el de nuestro entrañable amigo, hermano y compañero, Carlos Muniz Varela.

END US BLOCKADE AGAINST CUBA

For the past twenty one years, the Cuban people have been engaged in an all-out effort to develop their economy and to improve their standard of living. In many ways, they have been successful. Today they benefit from one of the most complete and far reaching programs in health care and education in Latin America. The road, however, has not been an easy one. Underdevelopment is not wiped out in a generation (or in two or three for that matter). The Third World can attest to that. But, the Cuban people have also had to suffer the consequences stemming from the U.S. imposed embargo.

During the sixties, Cuba saw her commercial opportunities severely limited. The embargo not only prohibited trade with the U.S. and U.S. corporations abroad, but also subjected third countries to penalties if they traded with Cuba. At the end of the decade, for example, France explored the possibility of buying nickel from Cuba.

In the early seventies, some changes began to take place. The embargo had failed insofar as it had not brought about the downfall of the Castro government. On the contrary, the Cuban Revolution was being consolidated. By 1973, the OAS resolved that its members were free to establish diplomatic and commercial relations with Cuba. Western Europe and Japan increased their trade with Cuba. The U.S. Department of Commerce allowed the Argentine subsidiaries of Ford Motor Company and General Motors Corporation to sell cars to Cuba. It is about time that the embargo be lifted. It is obsolete and only brings on added burdens to the Cuban people who are struggling against underdevelopment. It is also an obstacle to the free exchange of and ideas between the peoples of the two countries, which constitutes an infringement of the rights of U.S. citizens and limits the opportunities for enrichment of both nations that would result from increased travel and contact. Moreover, had there been no embargo, Americans would have benefitted from the extra jobs the contracts granted to Ford and General Motors created in Argentina.

An end to the embargo, however, is only a first step. The U.S. should proceed to normalize relations with Cuba. In an era of detente, it certainly is ironic that our government should hold out such a hostile policy towards Cuba. If our government has differences with that of Cuba, the only way to resolve them is by opening up communication channels. Ideological and political differences need not be an obstacle to such channels. The U.S. maintains diplomatic and commercial relations with the Soviet Union and China in the interests of world peace. Why not with Cuba? We cannot simply ignore a country that has diplomatic and commercial relations with 120 other countries throughout the world, moreover, the country that will be presiding over the Non-Aligned Movement for the next three years. This only serves to further isolate the U.S. from the developing countries, particularly from the nations of Latin America.

Last year, for example, the Cuban government initiated a Dialogue with the exile communities in the United States, Puerto Rico and other countries. Most exiles are by no means sympathetic to the Revolution, and yet, the Dialogue has resulted in the freedom of most political prisoners, the reunification of Cuban families and the right of exiles to visit Cuba. By normalizing relations, the Cuban government and the exiles, together, took a constructive step in improving human rights.

Lastly, the U.S. military holds a base in Guantanamo Bay in the southeastern coast of Cuba. It does so against the will of the Cuban people. To them, it is a constant reminder that a powerful nation has repeatedly violated their national sovereignty. The U.S. military base in Guantanamo has no strategic importance. Why does the U.S. government stay in Guantanamo?

We urge President Carter to take some constructive steps in easing tensions with the Cuban government. Bringing an end to the embargo, proceeding to normalize relations with Cuba and terminating U.S. presence in Guantanamo would significantly contribute to the renewal of the traditionally warm relations that have existed between our peoples.

"When Cuba becomes independent, I will ask for permission to fight for the freedom of Puerto Rico."

Support for Cuban revolution

Sat. April 19th.

Hundreds of thousands of Cubans passed the peruvian Embassy today, demonstrating their solidarity with the revolution, and celebrating the 19th anniversary of the heroic defeat of the U.S. backed C.I.A. invasion of the Bay of Pigs. Reports indicate that as many as one million people will pass by the Peruvian Embassy in Miramar, and that the people began marching as early as 6 a.m... Shouts of "Fidel!" and " Out with the parasites!" resounded as the people of Cuba marched in solidarity with Fidel.

and this is important. There are white women at the Center who have solid non-showy support around racial issues. Given this, it is too bad that most of the white staff, even though they try to deny it with a lot of talk, get a kick out of having the benefits of power. They enjoy the kinds of power relationships that exist within capitalist society, just as long as they are the ones who are benefitting from them. It is not just a race problem that we have here then - it is also a class problem.

This is why the Center should not be left completely in these people's hands. They use the Center not to really change things, but merely as a way for them to act out their oppressive fantasies.

What the Center needs at the moment is a good dose of Third World presence. Even a good dose of white working class presence would probably be helpful - some white women who side with Third World people out of belief and understanding rather than because they want to show off their "anti-racism" like some new kind of middle class status symbol. We don't need any more fancy administrators but rather some people who know what it's like to say it and mean it, "We are going to start changing things around."

An Additional Note:

The above notes were written a week ago. Since that time some things have happened that help make some of what I was trying to say clearer.

It has been brought to my attention during the last week that some of the white staff at the Center have been saying that the recent problems at the Center are the result of the fact that Jamila Gaston and I are not good enough feminists. They have said that in order to avoid conflicts like the one that is going on at the Center right now they will have to make sure that all staff people, in the future, are good feminists.

In saying such things, these women are pushing their luck. They are using the word feminism as a weapon with which they hope to intimidate people. They also hope that by suddenly raising the question of whether or not Jamila and I are feminists they can obscure the real problem, which is their racism. Once more some of the white staff at the Center are trying to cover up their own mistakes.

All this is very tiring, not to mention the fact that it is racist. You know, there are some non-professional Third World women I know who do not call themselves feminists. Yet they do more in one week for the women's struggle than some of these elitist white women who use the term fenimism like it were a police badge that gave them the right to boss people around.

Such elitism is not just abusive to Third World people. Anyone who has lived in this community long enough known that many white women are also alienated by this kind of arrogance. In terms of the Center, this means there is a real question here of community control. We have to take the Center now and make it into what we want it to be. If we don't, the Center will become useless.

supremecist attitudes of some of your staff. Because of this the Third World Woman's Task Force has a series of demands that will insure greater community control at the Center. Without such control, the Center will inevitably persist in its racism and will reinforce its increasing alienation from the Third World Community.

The person applying for the Third World Advocate position will have to be approved by the Third World Women's Task Force:

a.

The advocate will be accountable to the Third World Women's Task Force.

b.

The advocate will be expected to communicate effectively the needs and concerns of the Third World Women's Task Force and all Third World Women.

c.

The advocate will be accountable to the goals and objectives of the Third World Women's Task Force.

2.

The Third World Advocate will not function as an individual, but as a representative of the Task Force within Everywoman's center.

3.

The Center will be evaluated concerning their ability to work in non-racist ways with Third World people and the extent to which programs are effective in meeting the needs of Third World Woman's Task Force will oversee and coordinate this evaluation.

4.

At least four Third World professional staff will be hired for next year.

The position of Third World Advocate should be managed by 2-by time professional staff.

anti-semitism

created because oppression brings resistance. But unfortunately throughout the 19th up to our time there have been tendencies trying to blame the problems of capitalism to "the Jewish bankers and merchants" Toussenel, the Frenchman, giving his book the title: "Jews, the Kings of our Epoch" (Which reminds me of an article called the "the masters of the media"). He wrote "I advice all the revoltion makers to take all the banks from the Jews." In order to find a scape goat for the problems of capitalism, the Jews were accused of sucking the wealth of the societes. This was especially the case with the peak of the Anti-Semitic hysteria i.e. Nazism.

The Facsists tried to transmute the anti capitalism of the masses to Anti-Semitism "to fight against the Jewish merchants and bankers." The Facisists (backed by the big corporations of course) were sucessful in their demogogy. Because in Germany the Jews played a considerable role in the economic, and political spheres. Because there were enough Jews as the heads of banks for the identification of high finance with Judaism, to be readily accepted by the masses. A huge number of the brilliant socialist leaders were Jews. Anti-Semitism could be used to smash them by the big corporations. Thus Anti-Semitism ended in the most abominable genocide of all time. Capitalism unable to solve its inherent economic problems, survived through Facsism at the expense of the lives of 4.7. million Jews. (Among methods which were used, mass arrest, shootings, concentration camps, gas chambers etc...) All that went on until Eastern Europe was liberated by the Soviet army.

On the other hand, a movment grew which was created by the Jewish capitalists for their own class interests (1895). They had common interests with other European capitalists in taking over Palestine by expelling the Palestinian people (who had lived there for 2000 years). This reactionary movement is known as Zionism. Zionism claims to be fighting against Anti-Semitism. But that is pure hypocracy. Because Zionism accepts the fundemental tenet of Anti-Semitism which sees Jews as forever alien to the gentile societies. Israel can never be a safe place for the Jews; because it is taken over by exiling an other people. But the crimes of the Nazis against the Jews. Jews should stay in their native countries and struggle against Anti-Semitism and capitalism.

Right now, in the U.S. the most advanced capitalist country in the world, there are Facsist movements repeating the same notorious propaganda as the Nazis did. If not stopped by the socialists and Jews, this movement has the potential to be dangerous. At the crucial moments, at the times of serious economic or political crises which might threaten the very existence of capitalism, the big business and the U.S. governments and their means of propaganda (i.e. the media) will use racism against any minority as a scape goat to blame the problems on them. Hence the Iranians and Arabs are blamed for the price of gas at a time when Exxon is making huge profits. And at the same time Jews are accused of controlling the economy.

'We recognize there were errors in going too far to the left,' he said. 'We moved too rapidly. There were political errors. We did not think enough about the concrete organization xx the state. We emphasized the political conscience too much and had too little experience in the management of a state. We did not choose our public servants well and lost some control.

The program is being sponsored by the Massachusetts Coalition on Indochinese Refugees, the Smith student lecture committee, and Service Organizations of Smith and is open to the public.

The establishment of the Elizabeth Marting Treuhaft Chair at the Smith College School for Social Work was announced today by Smith President Jill Conway.

The chair, named for a Smith alumna of the Class of 1926, will be permanently endowed by Mrs. Treuhaft and her husband William C. Treuhalft. The Treuhafts are residents of Cleveland, Ohio.

Katherine Gabel, dean of the School for Social Work, has been appointed the first holder of the Treuhalft Chair which thus becomes Smith's first endowed deanship.

Dean Gabel, herself a Smith alumna, holds a master of social work degree from Simmons College School of Social Work, a Ph.D. from Syracuse University, and a J.D. from Albany Law School.

She has had extensive experience as a psychiatric social worker and was superintendent of Adobe Mountain School in Phoenix, Arizona, a correctional institution for juvenile offenders, from 1970 until she assumed her present post in 1973.

Among her current affiliations, she is vice president and a member of the executive committee of the American Correctional Association, a member of the American Bar Association and of several of its standing committees, and a member of the advisory committee of the National Institute of Law Enforcement and Criminal Justice.

In announcing the gift, Smith President Jill Conway said: "This is the most significant gift to be received by the School for Social Work in its 62-year history. The support it provides for the education of social workers rivals that normally given to the education of businessmen or engineers, and I am proud that the school, under Dean Gabel's leadership, has been able to call forth this spelndid level of support."

William Treuhalft, founder and former chairman of Tremco, Inc., a manufacturer of sealants and roofing products recently acquired by B.F. Goodrich, has been chairman of the board of University Circle in Cleveland and is a trustee and was formerly chairman of the board of Case-Western Reserve University.

Following her graduation from Smith, Mrs. Treuhalft taught for a few years at her preparatory school alma mater, Hathaway-Brown, in Cleveland. She has been an active volunteer and board member for a variety of cultural, educational, and social groups in the Cleveland area, including the Blossom Music Center, the Musical Arts Association, and University Circle.

In 1971, the Treuhaft became the first husband-and-wife team to win the human relations award from the National Conference of Christians and Jews.

The Smith College School for Social Work, founded in 1918, developed out of an emergency training course to prepare psychiatric social workers to meet some of the problems emerging from World War I. It has continued since that time as a coeducational school, the only professional school that is an integral part of Smith College.

Aide updates lighting in Koffler's stead

By SEAN HARVEY
Collegian Staff

An aide to Chancellor Henry Koffler told about 35 students yesterday of lighting improvements made on campus in the past two months, but many students expressed dismay and anger with the administration's overall approach to the problem of violence against women.

Assistant Chancellor Terence Burke replacing Koffler, who had been expected to address the students, said a lighting plan was designed and sent to 16 student groups for approval. To date there have only been five responses, Burke said.

"This plan has not been finalized and probably will not be until sometime this summer," Burke said. "But the administration hasn't waited for the final plan. We've already started making lighting improvements."

Burke said five new lights have been installed on Thatcher Way, one adjacent to Lewis House, one on the west side of NOPE athletic building, lights in parking lots P, 40 and 64, and lights at University Apartments. In the next few weeks, said Burke, leased lights will be installed on lots 22 and 44.

Burke was assailed with questions from angry students on topics such as all-female security patrols, workshops to fight violence against women and why the university does not indicate where these problems stand on their list of priorities.

"We wouldn't think of going without a football team," one student shouted, "but safe student corridors – forget it!"

Burke said 80 percent of all rapes occur indoors and all the lighting put up "won't make one iota of difference" for this 80 percent.

"The plan calls for $2.5 million to light seven miles of campus," Burke said. "There is no financial possibility to illuminate the whole campus."

"The problem is we are lorded over by white males who do not share our sense of urgency," said Mary Jane Pika of the Everywoman's Center.

"The whole point of the issue is we need time and we need money," Burke said. "We're not going to cure it overnight."

Bush, Kennedy claw to top in Penn. primaries

Senator Edward Kennedy reacts happily to the turn of events in last night's Pennsylvania primary. Kennedy was locked in a close race with President Jimmy Carter.

By JEFF BAKER
Collegian Staff

George Bush and Senator Edward Kennedy gain renewed hope for their presidential candidacies with solid leads in the Pennsylvania primaries last night.

With over half the vote counted in the Republican non-delegate selecting primary Bush held a lead over Ronald Reagan of 53 to 45 percent. The Associated Press and CBS news had declared Bush the winner in Pennsylvania, where he had spent a million dollars and put in two weeks of personal campaigning.

On the Democratic side, with 51 percent of the vote counted, Kennedy led President Jimmy Carter by 51 to 42 percent. CBS news gave Kennedy 96 of Pennsylvania's 185 delegates to Carter's 89.

In separate delegate caucuses held yesterday, Kennedy was gaining a majority of Vermont's 12 Democratic delegates, reversing the popular vote of March 4, when Carter defeated him 3 to 1.

George Bush ran back into the Republican presidential race with a victory over Ronald Reagan in yesterday's Pennsylvania primary.

Conn. cuts out-of-state NE regional tuition help

By BRIAN O'CONNELL
Collegian Staff

Beginning this fall semester, Connecticut residents enrolled at UMass under the Regional Students Program will no longer be exempt from paying out-of-state tuition rates due to a cut in Conecticut's 1981 budget, Connecticut Statehouse Spokesman Joseph Joyce said yesterday.

This cut will also affect Connecticut residents paying in-state tuiton at the other four New England state schools under the program. Presently, 218 Connecticut residents are enrolled at UMass under the program, all of whom will be affected by the cut, program co-ordinator Betty Bernini said yesterday. The program is sponsored by the New England board of higher Education.

The program enables students from any of the New England State universities to pay in-state rates at a school offering their major if their home state institution does not. According to Joyce, Connecticut legislators have opted not to appropriate monies toward the program, slashing the $120,000 needed for the program last week. Joyce cited "declining enrollments and escalating cost of higher education" as reasons for the budget cut.

Bernini said Connecticut residents enrolled in the program collectively save $136,000 in tuition costs annually "at UMass alone."

According to a statement released by the NEBHE last week, Connecticut will be the only New England state not to allocate funding for the Regional Student Program. The Regional Studen. Program has earned national acclaim for its role in matching students with "specialized curricula, saving neighboring states the expense of establishing duplicated courses of study," the statement said.

Presently, Connecticut residents enrolled at UMass under the Regional Students Program are paying the in-state $650 each semester tuition. According to Bernini, starting next fall these students will pay the $2,500 out-of-state semester tuition.

Joyce said the program "certainly has been a benefit to the state of Connecticut." "We're looking for other options" to aid financially strapped students she said. According to Joyce, there is a meeting at the NEBHE offices Friday in Wenham, Mass., where the program cut is "sure" to be debated.

"It is still a fluid situation," Joyce said.

According to NEBHE chairman and Rhode Island Senator John C. Revins, Jr., "It's clear to policy makers the country over that regionalism is the way to go in serving our people more effectively and saving dwindling tax dollars. It appears that Connecticut is about to run the wrong way – without the ball.

"Right now, it looks pretty dismal for Connecticut students enrolled in the program at UMass," Joyce said.

Amherst Ballet presents mix of tradition and improvisation

By SARAH SCHULTZ
Special to the Collegian

The Amherst Ballet Theatre Company brought a host of young dancers to the Fine Arts Center on Friday, April 18. The program consisted of seven original pieces creatively arranged by the company's choreographers: Robin Karson, Maggie George-Cramer, Gary Schaaf and Beth Hirschnaut.

The pieces ranged from "Degrees of Freedom", a series of six separate improvisations, to the more traditional "Spring Rhapsody."

The company is in its third year and now performs extensively in Western Massachusetts. The members, aged thirteen to eighteen, have the unique opportunity of taking classes with visiting teachers from professional companies, in addition to the classes they take at the Amherst Ballet Center, the official school of the company.

In its three year history, the Amherst Ballet Theatre Company has produced many fine dancers, some of whom have continued to study with such companies as Alvin Ailey, the Dayton Ballet, and the Omaha Ballet.

The company not only provides a fine opportunity for talented local youth, but also culturally enriches the community.

Spring concert tix available for week

Student tickets for this year's Spring Concert are now being distributed free of charge to all fee-paying UMass undergraduate students.

Students may pick up their tickets at the Hampden Commons in the Southwest Residential Area between 9 a.m. and 5 p.m. this week. A valid UMass Identification is required to pick up the tickets. Tickets will only be distributed until next Monday, April 28.

Guest tickets to the concert are also available for a cost of $15 each at the Fine Arts Center Box Office. Students and UMass employees may purchase up to four tickets for the event and must present a valid identification to make the purchase.

INDEX arrives; fewer '79 copies

The truck outside the Student Union Building means one thing: The 1979 edition of the UMass yearbook, INDEX, is here.

With an INDEX card, $3 and proof of classyear standing, a copy of INDEX is yours.

This policy will be strictly adhered to, says June Kokturk, INDEX editor-in-chief, so that only those entitled to an INDEX will receive one.

In the past, Kokturk said, 5,000 copies of INDEX have been printed. This year, however, 2,400 were printed, she said.

"There is really nothing that can be done; we lost $8,000 in our Student Activities Tax Fund last spring; we have no control over the funding process," Kokturk said.

Those who graduated in 1979, she said, will receive a copy in the mail.

A new wave in fashion—punk

ROBERT B. CARGILL
Collegian Staff

The average student at UMass might spend his/her day attending classes and studying for exams, but this is not true for senior art majore Diane and Gerry DiCicco.

A day in the life at the University for these two sisters from Boston involves the operation of PUNKCHOOASHUN, a table of New Wave fashion, jewelry, buttons, and posters, located along the Campus Center Concourse.

"We've been coming down to the Campus Center three or four days a week this semester. We take turns working at the table, usually between our classes, and we both try to be down here during the busy periods. Business has been real good - indicating an interest in New Wave that many people never knew existed in this area," the women said.

That resurgent interest in New Wave in the Pioneer Valley is exemplified by the rash of recent bookings of New Wave rock groups at the Blue Wall, Rahars, The Rusty Nail and the Quonset Restaurant in Hadley.

"We've always collected New Wave and punk paraphernalia, so this is nothing new to us. It's fun. We realized there wasn't anyplace to buy this kind of stuff in Amherst so we set up our table one day and the response was great. We like to think we've helped stimulate an interest in this area that was otherwise dormant," said Diane.

What is punk fahsion?

It is black suits with skinny silk ties and sunglasses; a string of pearls, a mini-skirt and fishnet stockings; sneakers, tight jeans with holes, and an old sportcoat; or red lipstick, dyed hair, and heavy eye shadow, along with a myriad of buttons proclaiming one's favorite bands.

"It's whatever you want it to be! Punk fashion is an expression, a way to stand our and be recognized and identified. New Wave music is a combination of energetic styles which simply carries over into one's mode of dress. New Wave or punk is something new Rich Martin as a malevolent Merlin in the University Ensemble Theater production of Jean Cocteau's KNIGHTS OF THE ROUND TABLE, translated by W.H. Auden performed last weekend and April 24-26 at 8 p.m. at the Frank Prentice Rand Theater in the UMass Fine Arts Center.

A few flaws fail to make flop of 'Knights of the Round Table'

By JOHN PARENTE
Special to the Collegian

The University Ensemble Theater's production of Jean Cocteau's "Knights of the Round Table" has a few considerable flaws, none of which can prevent it from being a wonderful evening of entertainment.

On the technical side, "Knights of the Round Table" is an unqualified success. Jeffrey Fiala's set, an intriguing futuristic vision of ancient Britain, is breathtaking. To this Camelot-meets-Metropolis environment, Marcia Dixcy's costumes add punctuation and warmth, and Robert A. Shakespeare's lighting endows the stage with mystery and magic. There are some special effects which are truly amazing, and must be seen to be believed.

The production's most notable problems lie in the acting by the cast of eight. Though there are no truly awful performances, too many are erratic; ranging from vivid and precise to perfunctory and unfocused. As Guinevere, Megan R. Smith suffers a bit from this tendency to waver, though her strong work in the play's second (and best) act is among the production's finest. Though Kevin Cristaldi and Theresa Jean O'Brien (as Launcelot and Blandine, respectively) avoid this problem with impressive ease, the best performance is by Laurence J. Geddes. As Gawain, Geddes is agile, energetic and a comedic knockout.

Director George W. Angell III has applied more stylistic touches than one could easily enumerate; and it is his attention to stylistic detail that finally pushes the whole thing over the top. There are some pacing problems that occasionally leave the lesser actors looking somewhat embalmed, but even this does not destroy the eclectic magic that is "Knights" greatest charm.

"Knights of the Round Table" continues its run April 24-26 in the Rand Theater at the Fine Arts Center. This production is an improbable amalgam of fairy tale, myth high camp, low humor, techno-theatrics and so much more; in which the many highs more than make up for the occasional lows. Debora Lichtenberg's dramaturgical booklet which accompanies the program is a stylishly designed assemblage of illustrations and background information that is both useful and interesting. It is a beautiful souvenir of a produciton that is quite beautiful on its own.

Leon Thomas

Friday, April 18, Leon Thomas and his trio performed at Hampshire College. Leon, popularized with his rendition of the song "The Creator has a Master Plan", by Pharoah Saunders, streched out and gifted his audience with the most soothing sound imaginable.

With a style unique to Thomas, baritone-bass notes rolled through the air as he formed a sea of sound with a vocal technique associated with that of yodeling. His trio consisted of Bassist, Marvin Bronson, Drummer, Jesse Hammeen and pianist, Neal Creque. Combined, they presented an evening of exciting entertainment which will not be forgotten soon.

How To Get A $1,615 A Week Job In Alaska
Even If Totally Unskilled Start At $1,020 Weekly

Anchorage, Alaska (Special)—Jobs in Alaska are now among the most highly paid in the world. And by high paying we mean big money—$1,020 to over $1,600 a week, plus room and board, either free or at nominal cost. The key to wealth is overtime—plenty of it. If you don't mind working about 70 hours a week at a relatively unskilled job, $12 to $19 an hour with time-and-a-half and even double time adds up to those big fat checks you've always dreamed about. So no matter whether you can run a dozer, weld, handle a shovel, fly a helicopter or even wait on tables, local and multinational corporations will be quite eager to forward transportation. And that is where we come in. We are the experts on the companies who are hiring. We developed the ALASKAN EMPLOYMENT KIT, a complete instruction manual and directory listing 1,320 current employers in the Arctic. Plus sample inquiry letters, resumes, application letters with pre-printed labels and procedures. And the jobs will go to those who know where and how to apply. This kit can be obtained by sending $9.95 cash, check or money order to ALASKA EMPLOYMENT, Dept. 13-5 894 National Press Building, Washington, D.C. 20045. On COD's add $1 goodwill deposit (deductible). Keep it for 90 days. If for any reason you do not obtain Alaskan employment within that time, or are not satisfied with the employment offered, simply return the ALASKAN EMPLOYMENT KIT and your money will be refunded promptly and without question. Do not delay. Tear out this message as a reminder. Send for your NO-RISK copy today.

Hormonal imbalance

"UMass guys," Suzy observed as she slipped into her purple satin pants, green suffocatingly-tight-glow-in-the-dark Danskin leotard, silver seersucker blazer, and matching five-inch heels, "are nerds."

"What makes you say that?" I asked, patiently waiting for her so we could head down to that hot sopt everyone's talking about – the Blue Wall.

DEBORAH WAYNE

"They're only interested in flooding their stomachs with beer. But do they take you out on a date? Ha! That they have no money for. It's bad enough being in the same room with them much less dancing with one."

"Suzy, now that you've written off half the population of UMass, why, may I ask, are you dragging me to the Blue Wall?"

"Because," Suzy muttered as she blew dry her frizzled hair, "it's Spring."

Ah, Spring. A phenomenon so powerful that it forces UMies to do things they wouldn't normally do when it's snowing. Why, as soon as the mercury hits 40 degrees do we not greet it with frisbees, bathing suits, and stereo speakers facing out the window for all to share? Class attendance dips miserably, not that I blame anyone. Concentration becomes a rare commodity. The ground changes to the consistency of quicksand. We dream of Cape Cod and Slim Whitman at Spring Concert. But those are just the superficial symptoms.

You know what really happens when Spring assaults UMass. Admit it, folks. UMies get horny. Ever notice that you daydream more than usual? Is your blood pressure a wee bit higher these days? Finding yourself looking around your classes for the first time to see who's there? Don't be ashamed; we're all affected by the hornies to some degree, it's just that some of us handle it better than others.

Could this be the Spring that great poets and philosophers wrote of? It is a disease that should be on the "ten most wanted list." The hornies can be fatal; it's only cure is a cold shower (or snow, whichever you prefer).

Suzy's floor has a spare bedroom. They use it as a lounge, but lately I wouldn't call what goes on in there lounging.

"Suzy," I asked as she threw on another layer of cheapo makeup, "if the walls of your lounge could talk, what kind of stories do you think thev'd tell?"

"Hair-raising ones, I'm sure. C'mon, let's ask."

The lounge was a room like any other – dirty white bricks, beer posters, two beds. Only this room was hotter than the rest.

"How about the story of Lola and the three Hampshire freshmen?" the cement-like voice suggested.

"That sounds promising. What happened?"

"Well, Lola was the most normal, innocent thing you ever met. Bio-chem major, 14-meal plan, junk food addict. Last week, something came over her. She bought a pair of purple satin pants and set out for Hampshire College, muttering something about meeting the Prince.

"At the crack of dawn she returned with three Hampshire spaceshots claiming to be the Prince's bodyguards, two pounds of Heartland cereal, and a jar of honey. Boy, I never realized that there were so many creative uses for granola. Later on, Lola confessed that this happens to her everytime it gets warm out."

"Wow! But you didn't tell us what happened," I insisted.

"Use your imagination," the walls answered. "I'm writing a book called 'The Confessions of a UMass Lounge.' I've got a million more where that came from – wait 'til it comes out in paperback."

"Suzy," I asked, 'Those wouldn't happen to be Lola's satin pants you have on, would they?"

"Nah. Are we going to the Blue Wall or not?"

"Sure, why not? It's Spring, isn't it?"

Nuclear accidents 'eventually inevitable'

A year ago the Three Mile Island nuclear power plant burst on the international scene. A rallying cry heard the world over in reponse was "We all live in Harrisburg." More than 100,000 Americans thundered their response, "No Nukes," within a month of the disaster in Washington D.C.

CHARLIE BAGLI

A year later the threat that Three Mile Island (TMI) waked many of us up to is still imminent. And anti-nuke/alternative energy activists are again calling on us to go to Washington on April 26 to march for a "Non nuclear World." Speakers include Dr. Helen Caldicott, Barry Commoner, Bonnie Raitt, and Pete Seeger.

This march comes at an important point. The Metropolitan Edison Company (MetEd), which owns the crippled plant at TMI, is now threatening to vent into the atmosphere all of the radioactive krypton 85 gas inside the reactor. MetEd and the Nuclear Regulatory Commission (NRC) officials say it can be done "with no significant exposure either to the general population or the site."

Angry residents of the area don't think so and have had enough. They simply don't trust any of the officials. One young father spoke for many when he charged the NRC and utility officials with "Using the very air that our kids breathe as radioactive disposal."

The people around TMI have plenty of reason to get angry, as do we all. Supposedly there are four ways to get rid of the krypton gas that is festering in the reactor vessel. Three of them would capture the gas without releasing it into the atmosphere. MetEd and NRC representative don't like those alternatives because they'll take too long. Conveniently, the fourth way – venting into the atmosphere – is the quickest and "cheapest" from their perspective.

This venting comes on top of documented reports of "mysterious goings-on" in the area around TMI. Farm animals and pets are suffering from hypothyroidism, weak bones, spontaneous abortions, infertility, and anemia. A few dairy farmers have been driven out of business. And finally, when the TMI disaster started, something was released into the atmosphere that the residents may never learn to live with. That is the overpowering anxiety of not knowing what is going on or when cancer will show up in them and their children.

The nuclear dilemma exemplified by TMI is far from over. The people of Pennsylvania paid Met Ed higher electric rates to get the TMI reactors built. MetEd profited from this public need because they "risked the capital." After the disaster, MetEd tried to raise the electric rates so the consumers could pay for MetEd loss. So far, MetEd has spent $500 million on the aftermath of the accident. Much of that has been covered by insurance, but that's about to run out. Now there is a possibility that MetEd will file for bankruptcy and leave the taxpayers with a "potentially dangerous $7 billion dollar albatross" that residents will be again called on to pay for.

It would be one thing if TMI was an isolated incident. Unfortunately, in the year since TMI, more incidents have occurred. Last week there was a radioactive leak in Hamburg, Germany. Incomplete reports have broken through a blackout in France concerning an ongoing nuclear accident. There have been radioactive leaks at the Turkey Point plant in Florida and the Lawrence Livermore labs in California. And only 30 miles away we have the plant with the 4th worst safety record in the US – Vermont Yankee in Vernon, Vt.

The President's Commission on the Accident at Three Mile Island concluded that the accident was "eventually inevitable" and that it could happen again – wherever there's a nuclear reactor plant.

For all of these reasons TMI is not over. For all of these reasons "We all live in Harrisburg." This situation requires a response from us all. We have to educate and keep the pressure up on our local plants.

Again this year there is a national rally in Washington, D.C. on April 26. 120 buses are expected from the Harrisburg-TMI area. We should join these people to say in a national voice: NO NUKES!

For the first time there is a national student contingent of the march. It is called Question Authority: We won't radiate or register for the energy monoplies.

As young people with a stake in the future, that is where we should be – with the people of Harrisburg, declaring that TMI must be closed and that we don't want our neighborhoods to become disaster areas, too.

Charles Bagli is a Collegian commentator.

Letters

Your choice is crucial

An open letter to all young people affected by registration.

Two major events have just occured which directly effect our lives. The front page of newspapers across the country carried both stories. The first was President Carter's renewed threat of military intervention in Iran, and second was the House Appropriations Committee voting to approve $13.3 million for the reinstitution of draft registration. \This proposal will now go to the entire House sometime next week. Carter is using his Congressional lobbiests to exert pressure on uncommited Congresspersons to insure the measure passes. Speaker of the House Rep. Tip O'Neill said he "would be supreaid if the measure were defeated."

This turn of events is critical. It is now more clear than ever that registration will, in fact, lead to a draft and that the draft is a pre-cursor to war. Registering for the draft in June is no longer the innocent act of just signing your name to a piece of paper. It may very well mean signing your life away. The decision of whether or not to register is crucial and deserves serious careful consideration.

Students Against the Draft \SAD\ at UMass recognizes that this decision is a matter of personal choice. We do, however, have trained draft counselors who know what the legal options are and are willing to help you make your decision.

Our government's move towards a confrontation must be reversed. We believe the most effective means to bring this about is through a widespread collective refusal to register. In this manner we can exercise our right to determine the future of this country. SAD is forming support groups for those people who choose not to register. If you have already made your decision not to register or are unsure and would like to talk with someone about your options, contact SAD in the Student Affairs section of the SCERA office, or come to one of our meetings.

There is, however, a more immediate preventative action that people of all ages can take. Presently there are over 100 members of Congress who are still undecided on the issue of registration. We strongly urge everyone to write to his/her representatives at Congress and let them know you are opposed to registration.

'But . . Dr. Demento!'

To the Editor –

This letter concerns the inadequacies and poor judgement of some of the staff at the University Health Services facility. Approximately one month ago I approached the clinic with an injured foot. It was a little bit after dinner, and I was informed that there was only one doctor available. Imagine – almost 26,000 students and only one doctor available. Anyway, I said that was all right, I'd wait. The center was pretty busy, as usual. Eventually it was my turn.

The doctor read my note, "Possible broken foot. X-Ray?" and invited me into his office for the ensuing inspection. The diagnosis was a possible bruised ligament or injured tendon. The treatment, "wear a boot, and don't run on it." So I followed doctors orders, limping around for a month, only to discover that I did indeed fracture my foot. The pain eventually got so bad that I returned and insisted upon an X-ray. The result was positive!

Now, I'm sure this is not the first case like this. Be it a broken bone, an illness, or disease, I've learned one lesson. When you go to the infirmary, demand help! Take some initiative, because it seems to be lacking. And remember, doctor doesn't always know best.

Men aged 19, 20 targeted

House approves registration

By JIM ADAMS
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON — The House of Representatives gave its approval yesterday to President Carter's plan to register millions of young men for the draft this summer.

The House passed a measure to supply $13.3 million to revitalize the dormant Selective Service System and clear the way for registration of some 4 million young men aged 19 and 20.

House approval of the draft registration proposal came on a preliminary vote of 218-188 after House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill had predicted the measure would pass. The final vote, taken after consideration of several amendments, was 219-180, closer than White House officials had expected.

Although the House approved the registration plan, it would take further congressional action to institute an actual draft.

Under Carter's plan, young men born in 1960 and 1961 will be required to register for the draft at post offices across the country.

Carter's registration request had sparked antidraft protest demonstrations reminiscent but less volatile than those of the Vietnam war years, but the vote brought no response from the House galleries.

Gazelles win 3-2

By MAUREEN SULLIVAN
Collegian Staff

It turned out to be the lowest-scoring effort of this season, but the UMass women's lacrosse team passed checked and defended its way past the University of Rhode Island, 3-2, at the NOPE fields yesterday. UMass is now 7-0.

URI ran a zone against the Gazelles man-to-man, in a situation similar to the Harvard game Saturday. The Rams manager to bottle up UMass' many chances to score, by intercepting and by some crucial saves by Ram goalie Tracy Sanders. At the other end of the field, UMass dominated, using passing and speed to keep URI off balance.

With such a tight show of defense by both teams, there was no scoring until 18:21 of the first half, when Laura O'Neil intercepted a Ram pass, cradled upfield and passed to Jean Hackett, who fed the ball to Cari Nickerson, Nickerson then jammed it in from the left side to make it 1-0.

The Rams blitzed the Gazelle defense for two quick scores within the first minute of the second half. Nickerson scored the game-winner at 1:50. The rest of the game saw a battle of goal-line defenses, with UMass taking over the momentum in the last ten minutes. Margie Anderson, Laura O'Neil, Julie McHugh and Nickerson led the Gazelles through the game with a passing network around the URI goalie which ate up the clock. UMass goalie Robin Jennings plugged up whatever chances URI had with glove and crosse saves.

"We worked the ball well," UMass coach Pam Hixon said. "We took some good shots, and the URI goalie stopped a lot of them. They had a good zone against us,so we couldn't score that much."

Betsy Mazeral's two goals, including one with just 55 seconds left to play, gave the JV Gazelles a 4-3 win over URI. Other goals for UMass included Martha Burri and Linda Thayer.

Both the varsity and JVs will host Bridgewater State College tomorrow afternoon at the NOPE fields. The varsity faces off at 3:00 p.m. while the 4-2 JV squad plays its final game of the season beginning at 4:00 p.m.

Naiads' annual show to run this week at NOPE

By SUE BOISSEVAIN
Collegian Staff

A casino in the pool area? Come see for yourself this week, April 23-26 in NOPE pool at 8 p.m. when the Naiads present "Water Wheel of Fortune."

This year's annual spring show revolves around a casino and consists of 16 short synchronized swimming routines about gambling, playing cards, losing money, drinking, and seducing.

A solo will be performed by Bonnie Warner, to the music of "Your Good-Will Ambassador" features wiggles and struts on the pool side and an aquatic solo. Cindy Holmes and Bobette Williams will synchronize their stunts to the tune of the Little River Band's "A Lonesome Loser," while another duo entitled "A Pair" will be performed by Naomi Wolff and Debbie LaBahn to "Black Frost" by Grover Washington Jr.

Other music for the routines includes Kenny Roger's "The Gambler," "One More Dime," and "Bottle of Wine" by Porter Wagoner, Ricki Lee Jones' "Easy Money," The Moody Blues' "The Morning," "The Night They Invented Champagne," from Gigi, "Theme from the "French Connection," Hammerstein's "I Enjoy Being A Girl," "Don't Shoot the Hooey to me Louie" from "Over There," "Another Hundred People" by Stephen Sondheim, music by Emerson Lake, and Palmer, and music form "Sweet Charity."

This synchronized swimming extravaganza will feature the Naiads synchronize their swimming and stunts in a casino at moshpere. Each number will feature a variety of colorful costumes, props, lighting, and stunts that many have never seen performed in the water before. Last year's spring show, "Naiads on Broadway," received a good reaction from audiences.

Naiads has been putting on spring shows for almost 20 years. The shows are put together and the numbers are choreographed by the members. Every year the club gets larger and this year there are 34 women and one man. The club encourages men to join.

Tickets can be purchased at the door or Friday at the Naiads' table in the Campus Center Concourse. Prices are .75 for students, children, and senior citizens and $1.25 for adults. Refreshments will be sold and the audience is advised to wear light summer clothing. There will also be a 10-minute intermission.

Naiads became a student-run club in 1974 and is a non-profit organization.

Ruggers tame Tufts

By DONNA SULLIVAN
Collegian Staff

With wins last Saturday, the UMass Rugby Club side A pulled itself out of a 1-4 hole to better its record, and Side B evened its record at 3-3. Barry Entner had an amazing Saturday afternoon scoring five tries to give the UMass ruggers a 33-0 shutout over Tufts at Boyden field. It was Stefan Rutherford in the Side B game who scored two tries in their 18-6 win over Keene State, also at Boyden field.

The UMass Side A looked quicker than Tufts, outrunning them with each play. They had ball handling in their favor also, showing off a number of strong passing drives.

Entner scored the first of five early in the game, after the UMass ruggers brought the ball deep into Tufts territory.

The ball seemed content to stay in Tufts territory and UMass capitalized again when Kelly Atteridge ran in the second try after a passing drive. Andy Middleton made it 10-0 with the conversion kick.

Two-thirds of the way through the first half, Entner outran Tufts defenders en route to his second try of the day. Entner displayed the type of speed that beat Tufts all afternoon. Middleton was again good for the extra two points and a 16-0 lead.

Entner chalked up two tries in a row early in the second half, number three and four for him. Middleton brought his point contribution to nine after three successful conversion kicks and a penalty kick good for three points.

The unstoppable Entner called it a day after scoring his fifth try late in the second half. Entner ran the ball into the end zone after a scrum deep in the Tufts half of the field.

Rutherford, Jim Nagle, and Paul Cabot combined for four tries in the Side B win over Keene State. Bruce Adams secured the ball after a ruck and passed to Rutherford who brought it into the end zone for the try. Rutherford's other tally came on a breakaway pass from Chris Lowey.

Tennis teams victorious

Men

By SEAN HARVEY

In what captain Dave Nowak termed "our biggest win in about two years" the UMass men's tennis team secured a spot in the 'A' division of the New England championships with a 5-4 upset of highly-touted Boston College Sunday at Chestnut Hill. The Minutemen closed out their season yesterday at 6-1 with a triumph over Springfield College at Boyden courts.

The two key points of the BC match, according to assistant coach Bob Miller, were a 7-6, 6-1 number two singles victory by Mark Huetteman and a 6-2,6-1 number one doubles victory by Nowak and Sergio Strepman.

"The doubles win was the most unbelievable tennis match I've witnessed in two years as assistant coach," Miller said. Head coach Steve Williams was out of town and unable to attend the match.

Other winners for the Minutemen were at number three singles Nowak, at number five singles Danny Gallagher, and at number six singles Matt Modlish. Strepman lost at number one singles and Modlish and Huetteman at number two doubles and Rich Sontag and Neil MacKertish at number three doubles lost. MacKertish also lost his number four singles match.

"It was a really gutsy win," Nowak said. "Everybody gave 100 percent. Coach Miller was definitely a factor in the win. He was constantly cheering us on."

BC finished fifth in New England last year. "With this win," Miller said, "we just about guaranteed ourselves a berth in the 'A's'." Miller learned yesterday that UMass was selected for the 'A's.

Women

The UMass women's team won its first match of the season yesterday, defeating Smith College decisively, 6-3.

Fifth singles Chris Carson won both her sets with no problem at all. The Smith woman gave her no trouble as Carson shut her our 6-0, 6-0.

First singles Barbara Mills also had no problem as she won her two sets 6-2, 6 4. Third singles Beth Coldberg also won although she felt that she was not playing up to her potential.

All of the singles players won with the exception of number six, Lynn O'Sullivan. "I felt that I did not play well at all," O'Sullivan said. She lost 4-6, 3-6.

The doubles action saw a pair of upsets, with both number one and two UMass teams losing to their opponents.

The number one team, Cathy Burke and Carolyn Tarbell, won the first set by a score of 6-2, and went on to lose the next two sets with scores of 6-4, 7-6. The last set ended up in an upsetting tie-breaker. Number two doubles, Jean Roberts and Helen Najarian, also lost in straight sets of 6-2, 6-3.

R.A.union?

In SW, seek to renegotiate

By ED LEVINE
Collegian Staff

Residential Assistants and Assistant Heads of Residence in the Southwest Residential Area have formed a group to lobby for their interests.

The group, which claims to have representatives in every dormitory in Southwest, will become a Recognized Student Organization by the end of the week, according to Alan Smith, an R.A. in Thoreau House.

"We're basically interested in the position of the R.A.'s," Smith said. "We have a very vague contract. We're trying to negotiate."

Smith said Southwest R.A.s were upset because they are being required to work from 7 p.m. on Thursday, May 8, to 7 p.m. on Sunday, May 11, during Spring Concert weekend. The R.A.s are being offered no extra pay for the 72 hours of work, Smith said.

"In effect, we're being paid for working 5.06 hours, $15.68 per week," he said. "We're getting no supplimental pay, but at the same time we're expected to work up to 72 hours."

Smith said the R.A.s would prefer not to strike for the weekend of the concert but wanted to enter into negotiations with the administration to settle the dispute.

"There are 187 R.A.s and A.H.R.s in Southwest and we expect to have a vast majority of them in our coalition," he said. "One of our general goals is to re-negotiate our contract."

The main goal of the organization is to form an effective bargaining unit for the R.A.s, Smith said.

"We want to have a recognized organization of R.A.s in Southwest and have input into policies that effect us and the quality of life in Southwest."

Smith said he "wouldn't be surprised" if nearly 75 percent of the Southwest R.A.s became actively involved in the organization. A second meeting of the group is scheduled for tonight.

Soviets, UM debate here

Ideologies clash at packed Mahar

By CAROLE SAKOWSKI
Collegian Staff

The question of the obligation of the individual to the state was debated last night by the Russian International Debate Team and the University Debate team before a capacity audience in Mahar Auditorium.

Representing UMass were Laszlo Tikos, professor of Slavic Studies, and Robert Corn, a UMass graduate currently working for the Fred C. Koch Foundation.

Arguing for the Soviets was Olga Ivanova, a post-graduate at the Institute of the World Economy and the Soviet Academy of Sciences, and Alexi Kruglov, a Frunze State University graduate and member of the Soviet Student Council.

Both teams had plenty to say, but said what is usually expected of Americans and Soviets—in terms of ideological backgrounds.

"Americans are responsible for their success or failure. They can freely express their ideas in the United States," Tikos said. "In the Soviet Union, the people are not free to travel. They are collectivized."

"I'm going to tell you the way we see the Soviet Union as residents," said Ivanova. "We have many results to show since our revolution 60 years ago. We are proud of our system as Americans are proud of their democracy."

The ideas flowed throughout the debate, covering the various notions of the individual, the ideal world and the notion of duty.

A house, a haven in Times Square

Father Bruce Ritter

By SCOTT SOLOMON
Collegian Staff

EDITOR'S NOTE: This is the first in a two-part series on Father Bruce Ritter. Ritter will be speaking at the Student Union Ballroom on Wednesday, April 30, on "Child Prostitution: The Sexual Supermarket." Admission is free.

NEW YORK — Veronica was killed two weeks after her 12th birthday, when her pimp threw her out of the 10th story window of a rundown Times Square hotel.

He still hangs out in the bars up and down Eighth Avenue, bragging that he did it. He was never arrested. Never.

Reverand Bruce Ritter spoke sadly, his eyes filling with tears as he told the story of Veronica. It was one that he has told probably a hundred times to audiences around the country, when he asks for money to help his "kids," the kids on the city streets of New York.

"Veronica was 11 years old when I first met her," recalls Ritter. "And she looked just like an 11-year-old kid. She had already been arrested eight times for prostitution," he continued. "Eight times the judge gave this 11-year-old kid a 100 dollar-or-less fine and eight different times her pimp, sitting in the back row of the courtroom, paid this small 'business tax' and put her back out on the street."

Since 1977, Ritter's under-21 facility and more recently his Covenant House (opened in March, 1979) have become the melting pots for thousands of runaways who are devoured by the $1.5 billion sex industry run by five major New York crime families.

The modern, brick-framed Covenant House stands out among the decrepit buildings and tenements on the corner of 41st Street and 10th Ave. A white banner, on which is a black-outlined dove of peace, waves invitingly from just above the main entrance. Since Covenant House opened three years ago, 15,000 kids have passed through its doors.

The 1980 budget for Covenant House is $5.6 billion. The facility, which houses between 70-100 kids each night, includes a 19-member medical staff, five of whom are full-time employees. The one rule which Ritter insists upon is a simple one: No staff member may turn a child away, "or I will fire them."

Often times, Covenant House serves as a place for a kid to stay when he has no place else to go. It may act as a two, three, or four week shelter, or perhaps only a single night way-station. Frequently, however, it cannot act as the protective force which Fr. Ritter and his staff would like.

"We had nine kids killed last year," he said. "They're murdered, stabbed, shot, thrown out of windows, cut up in pieces. It's a very short life for a lot of our kids."

Many of the children who seek shelter at Covenant House are not from the New York area. Instead, they are runaways from all across the country, part of the one million who flee from their homes each year. Usually the kids are from one parent families which have a history of alcoholism, child abuse, and poverty.

"There are very few mysteries as to why a kid runs away," says Ritter. "Kids run away because they feel, and rightly so, repudiated, scorned, and rejected by their families. If you want a kid to run away just let him know that you don't want him around, you don't love him, you don't care about him. He'll run."

The big-city sex industry thrives on the "Veronicas" of the streets. They star in quarter peep shows, porn movies,and topless bars. The kids land at the Port Authority, in the heart of New York's sexual kingdom as soon as they step off the bus, and are easy prey for the thousand or so pimps that flourish in the Times Square district.

When you're 14, 15, or 16, or for that matter 17, 18, or 19," says Ritter, "and you're cold and hungry and scared and you've got nothing to sell except yourself, you sell

DIGEST

Kennedy edges Carter in Pa.

PHILADELPHIA — Sen. Edward M. Kennedy outlasted President Carter to win the Pennsylvania presidential primary by the frailest of margins yesterday, and said he'll have to do better to catch up in the race for the Democratic nomination.

The long, slow count of ballots in the Tuesday election was so close that Kennedy and Carter just about split the state's Democratic nominating votes. Only a handful of popular votes, out of more than 1.4 million cast, separated the winner and the loser.

Olympic vote illegal, court told

WASHINGTON — The U.S. Olympic Committee illegally caved in to political pressure when it voted to boycott this summer's Moscow Games and the decision should be reversed, 19 Olympic hopefuls told a federal court yesterday.

The athletes contended in a lawsuit that the international Olympic Charter requires national Olympic committees to "resist all pressures of any kind...whether of a political, religious or economic nature."

UConn seeks corporate funds

STORRS, Conn. — The University of Connecticut is making a late start in looking for funds from private contributors, but that is the direction the state-funded school must take, President John A. DiBiaggio said yesterday.

"In a state so generously endowed with corporate headquarters," DiBiaggio said in an address marking the end of his first year as president, "we should be attracting a much higher level of support from outside sources than we are at present."

The problem these days at the University of Connecticut, as at all state-run institutions, is lack of money.

Iranians question deadline

An Iranian leader said yesterday he doubts Iran can meet the European Common Market deadline of May 17 for release of the American hostages. Further indications surfaced of closer economic and industrial cooperation between Iran and the Soviet Union.

Canada announced new economic and diplomatic sanctions against Iran because of its "serious and continuing violation of international law" by holding the hostages. Britain warned Iran it would risk sanctions by most nations unless it meets the mid-May deadline.

Six deaths were reported in continued fighting yesterday on Iran's university campuses. Tehran newspapers said the new violence occurred one day after 18 students died on three campuses.

Ayatollah Mohammad Beheshti, head of Iran's Justice Ministry and a member of the ruling Revolutionary Council, told reporters in Tehran "We need more time."

Beheshti said the situation was made more difficult by the European actions: a ban on new export and service contracts with Iran and all military sales to Iran, and reduction of diplomatic staffs in Tehran.

Iranian President Abolhassan Bani-Sadr said in an interview broadcast by the French radio station Europe 1 that Iran does not plan to cut its ties with Europe because of the sanctions agreed to by the Common Market members.

Senate budget 'ready in time'

By MICHAEL SILVA
Collegian Staff

Student Government Association Treasurer Al Wallace, told the Undergraduate Student Senate last night that all the requirements set by the Board of Trustees to restructure the budget will be met.

"We are making progress with Arthur Anderson (the professional accounting firm chosen to review the Recognized Student Organization system)," Wallace said. The trustees' mandate that provisions be provided in the new system for liquidating budget deficits, account audits and a cost beneficial analysis of the system will meet the May 7 deadline, said Wallace.

The new accounting system proposed by Aruthur Anderson would utilize the present University system, said Wallace. The cost of a separate, student-owned system would be $350,000, he said. But student autonomy can be maintained even if the accounting system is moved to the University system, he added.

Wallace also announced that as of March 31, there was a $157,000 deficit in RSO accounts. This deficit must be erased by the end of the semester, he said.

In other Senate business, Union Program Council Talent coordinator Arthur Edelstein said only three acts will play at Spring Concert because police require the concert to end by 5 p.m., and "the Allmans will play two to three hours." Over half of the guest tickets have been sold and things are going well enough now, said Edelstein.

Women's Studies promoted

By LISA CAPONE
Collegian Staff

The Women's Studies Program (WOST) will conduct a Teach-in/Speak-out today from noon to 4 p.m. in the Student Union Ballroom, in response to "the crisis facing the program," according to staff member Arlene Avakian.

The crisis, Avakian said, arises from the fact that over two years ago, on March 9, 1978, the Faculty Senate approved a Women's Studies major separate from the auspices of the Bachelor's Degree in Inidividualized Concentration program. This action was approved by both former Chancellor Randolph Bromery and Acting Provost Jerry Allen, Avakian said.

"The problem is that nothing has happened in two years," she said. Women's Studies reinitiated action regrarding the major this year. Avakian said that Allen said he has come to a decision, but it is up to Chancellor Henry Koffler to officially announce that decision.

"The reason for the Teach-in is in response to a request to Koffler for an answer (on the status of the WOST major) by April 22," Avakian said. Koffler told WOST staff members this week that he could not give them a decision by that date.

Both Koffler and Allen were unavailable for comment yesterday. Assistant Chancellor Terence Burke said that he was "not aware that a decision had been reached" on the Women's Studies issue. Burke said, as he understands it, Koffler is attempting to reach his decision by the end of April, based on Allen's recommendations,

The Teach-in/Speak-out will begin with a history of the WOST Program, followed by speakers from the 14 campus groups who have pledged their support for approval of a Women's Studies major. Some of these organizations include: Undergraduate Student Senate, Graduate Senate, Everywoman's Center, and the Student Center for Educational Research and Advocacy.

Supporters will then break up into small groups to discuss planning and strategy in order to finally reach a consensus on what WOST's next action should be.

According to Avakian, all possible outcomes will be considered. For example, she said, "If the chancellor approves the major, we have to make sure that the president approves it.

"We're going to try to cover all bases and look toward the future," she said.

Andy Young to speak at FAC

By SEAN HARVEY
Collegian Staff

Former United States Ambassador to the United States Andrew Young, who at the last minute cancelled a UMass speaking engagement scheduled for February 19, is slated to speak Monday, April 28 at the Fine Arts Center on "America's Foreign Policy."

Young cancelled the original date because his father was having his leg amputated the same day.

Tickets will cost $2 for UMass students and $3 for all others, and are available at the Student Union Box Office from 9 a.m.-5 p.m.

Since resigning from his post at the U.N. eight months ago after it was learned he was secretly negotiating with the Paletine Liberation Organization, Young has been campaigning for President Carter, speaking on college campuses four days a month, and running his nonprofit corporation called Young Ideas Inc.

Young commands a $6,000 honorarium when he speaks but is only charging Distinguished Visitors Program, the group sponsoring the event, $4,000, according to DVP chairman Howard Goldman. Young agreed to lower the fee, after lengthy negotiations, because of his cancellation.

The main thrust of Young Ideas Inc. is increased American trade with developing nations. Young describes the corporation as a "public-interest concern somewht comparable in its altruism to Common Cause."

Young, 48, is a graduate of Howard University and Hartford Theological Seminary, and is an ordained minister in the United Church of Christ. He was the first black to hold the U.N. post and was elected to the U.S. House of Representatives from the fifth district of Georgia in 1972.

Young has sold out at most college campuses he has spoken at, Goldman said, but so far only 115 out of 2,000 available tickets have been sold.

Spring Concert '80 student tickets are now available in Hampden Commons in Southwest. Please bring I.D.

Spring Concert '80 is intended to be a One day Show, NOT a weekend event. Your cooperation in encouraging your guests to leave the area after the show is imperative to ensure the success of the event and the future of large student-run events on campus.

Filmfest slated

A three-day film festival sponsored by the Bachelor's Degree with Individual Concentration Program began last night and will continue tonight and tomorrow night featuring work by professional, independent animators and local students.

Tonight, the festival highlights the works-in-progress of several student animators, filmmakers, photographers and artists from the Five-College area. Works include: "The Nicest Dirt I Ever Saw," a videodocumentary by former UMass students Nancy Cohen and Peggy Carsley; a super 8 film on the recent Wesco strike, also by Nancy Cohen; still photography by Michael Kamins; and animated films by Alan Silberberg, David Pitlik and Karen Batting.

There will be a reception before the presentations at 7:30 p.m. in the second floor lobby of Herter Hall.

Tomorrow night, Bugs Bunny, Daffy Duck, Popeye, and Betty Boop headline an evening of commercial animated cartoons. UMass English Professor Jack Shedoian will also appear as a guest speaker. The films will be shown in Herter 231 beginning at 8.

Even the most controversial of subjects were touched upon: the Olympic boycott and the arms race.

"OK, America might be stronger than the Soviet Union militarily," said Kruglov. Appealing to the audience, he said, "but it doesn't matter to me whether I can be destroyed once or 30 times. And I don't think it matters to you, either."

Objecting to a question by Tikos, in which he implied that not all Soviet citizens can travel freely within the Soviet Union, Iranova said, "Since the last party congress, all Soviet citizens have the same passport."

"What's more important: the individual or the collective?" an audience member asked the Soviet team.

"You can't have an individual without a collective," said Kruglov, adding, "Socialism forms the individual."

The debate is one of a series sponsored by the Speech Communication Association Committee on International Discussion and Debate.

"These debates are designed for the expression of ideas and the promotion of dialogue between our two countries," said Lucy Keele, spokeswoman for the committee. "That is the important thing."

There was no formal judgement on the debate.

There were supposed to be three debaters on each team but due to a family illness, Nickolai Sakharv of the Soviet team had to cancel. Dennis Curran, a UMass senior, was to be the third debater.

After the debate, a UMass debate team member said some members of the team thought they recognized Gus Hall, Communist Party U.S.A. presidential candidate, asking a question during the proceedings.

Time parts local arts

In a large community such as this, ugly rumors occasionly get started. Often, they have no basis in fact. Unfortunately, I recently caught wind of one that seems to be destined to become reality. There is talk of converting the Hampden Studio Theater in Southwest into another University store. The reason given for such a wise and well thought out descision is that the Hampden theater was not generating enough revenue. (What else?)

The addition of a store to Southwest would be the final touch to totally cutting the area off from the rest of campus. With a University store in Southwest, it would be possible to eat, sleep, take classes and shop without leaving the friendly shadow of JQA. Also, since the lack of revenue generated by

Hampden is the problem, could it be that some new blood is needed running the theater? Since there are several new student groups interested in the theater as performing and rehearsal space, it would be logical to assume that Hampden's income would take an upswing in semesters to come.

All this, ugly rumor or otherwise, is indicative of the cavalier attitude with which society regards the arts. When talk of budget cuts start, whether at the high school, college, or community level, the arts are where they begin.

Now, to be totally objective, I must look at the other side of things. Times are tough; sacrifices have to be made, and everyone has been making them. The thing the arts need more than anything else is support.

When was the last time you saw a concert anywhere other than at the Blue Wall? Or, better yet, when was the last time you saw a play?

That is one question that I can probably answer. It was in highschool. After reading Macbeth in your English class for six weeks, you were taken to the auditorium where the Drama Club performed Macbeth for you. You either couldn't hear all those high, whining adolescent voices, straining with, "thees," "thous" and "forsooths," fell asleep, snuck out, or spent the whole time shooting paper clips at the stage until Mrs. Crabtree told you to stop — and who could blame you? Small wonder few people prefer anything stronger than "Mork and Mindy" anymore.

The arts intimidate people. People forget that the arts were conceived to entertain the populace. They think of them as more of an intellectual experience. Unfortunately, the arts themselves are also guilty of this same elitism; they have forgotten the "groundlings" and are, especially on this campus, consumed with the idea of being an academic experience.

Both parties had better get their priorities straight, and quickly, before someone tears down the Fine Arts Center to put up a shopping mall.

Letters

RA's are people, too

To the University

We are a group of Resident Assistants (R.A.'s) from Southwest who have come to a grievous situation. The University has obviously decided to try and take advantage of the dormitory staff throughout the Southwest campus. To wit:

1. We, as R.A.'s, have been told that during Spring Concert we are compelled to remain within our dorms from Thursday, May 8 at 7 p.m. until 7 p.m. Sunday, May 11, excluding the actual concert.

2. We are not receiving any compensation for these extended services despite the fact that some 13,000 hours of security money has been set aside for work-study students to work during this hectic weekend.

3. The University is forcing us to work under these circumstances because of our blatantly ambiguous contract and job-description.

4. We the R.A.'s have not been consulted at all as far as security or support from other campus agencies such as Whitmore, UPC, UMass Police, or the Chancellor.

We must impress upon the campus community that these gripes are just the tip of the iceberg as far as problems facing the R.A.'s here at UMass. We are now asking for the support of our floormates, and the entire student body, as well as our H.R.'s.

There comes a time when action must be taken if any credibility is to remain among our staffs. If some of our above complaints are not resolved before May 2, we will be forced to take some actions which can only result in adverse conditions regarding room choosing, Spring Concert and semester closing.

We are anxiously awaiting a response...

Letters Policy

Letters to the editor should be kept as short as possible, preferably no longer than two pages. They should be typed at 67 characters per line, triple-spaced.

All letters should contain the author's name, address, and telephone number for verification. Telephone numbers will not be printed.

Love it or leave it, basically

To the Editor—

I am writing this letter to express my anger, but mostly my sorrow and disappointment, in people, Americans, who continually condemn this great country in the area of foreign policy, specifically Afghanistan and registration/draft proposals, when the support of all Americans is desperately needed.

I can't believe there are Americans who actually say that Afghanistan is none of our business, and that we have no right to condemn the U.S.S.R. because the United States did the same thing in Vietnam. That's bullshit!!! Granted we were wrong in Vietnam and had no right being there. We made a mistake. However, our intervention in Vietnam is not even in the same category as the Soviet intervention in Afghanistan.

Vietnam in no way threatened world peace nor was it a possible prelude for us to upset the entire world economically. By invading Afghanistan, it is now possible for the Soviets to control the Persian Gulf, from which a high percentage of our oil and our allies' oil comes from. Even now the Soviets continue to build their military units along the Iranian borders in the U.S.S.R. and Afghanistan, as well as along the Afghanistan-Pakistan border. Anyone who says this doesn't mean anything had better guess again. I don't think the Soviets are planning to stand around and look at each other for the next ten years. Even if they are, this imbalance of power can not be allowed. All countries at this time, especially the super powers, must instate a primary directive of non-interference in order to help assure world peace.

These facts, and others to be mentioned, help support my argument that a registration would be in the best interest of this country. Registration would simply allow us to have at our speedy disposal the personnel necessary if a draft becomes necessary, most likely for reasons of Soviet aggression. Registration is not an invitation to war, it is simply a passive means of showing the Soviets that we are serious about not allowing them to take control of the Persian Gulf. If you're one of those people who says we don't need the oil that comes out of the Persian Gulf, you had better wake up and stop dreaming, because at this point we do. Perhaps in twenty or thirty years we won't, but now we do.

Another argument that I hear most often is that registration is a prelude to draft and draft inevitably leads to war. That's bullshit and a cop-out. A large majority of the countries in this world have always had a draft-type system for maintenance of the military, never just a volunteer service, and you rarely hear anyone complain. They consider it their duty to their country; right or wrong. In these countries people between the ages of 18 and 26 [often both men and women] are required to report as often as once a week or for a year or two at a time for military training. If draft is a prelude to war, then through this line of reasoning the entire world would continually be at war.

It really upsets me to see how little people [sic] appreciate this country, and aren't willing to fight for it. I don't yet off on the idea of getting my brains blown out in the jungles of some alien country any more then the next person, but if my country calls me to fight for it I will, and I'd hope all Americans would if it became necessary. What would have happened if no one wanted to fight during World War II?

In closing I would just like to say, this is your country, and it needs your support now as much as ever, not your condemnation. So please take a good look at it, it's a beautiful country, the best one on earth. "Love it or leave it," but if you do leave, good luck — you won't find anywhere better.

Anti-choice legislation moving thru House

By ANNE MERCIER
Collegian Staff

An anti-choice bill is currently making favorable progress through the Massachusetts State legislative system.

A bill sponsored by Rep. Paul White, D-Boston, would require pregnant minors wanting an abortion to get permission of a judge if they cannot get permission from both parents or their legal guardian. This bill would also require that a description of the physical features of a fetus be given to all women before they can obtain an abortion.

White said he was motivated to sponsor the bill because he "personally favors the policy," and thinks that narrower guidelines regulating abortions in this state are needed in general.

"In the way the legislation is drafted, the impact is on the consent requirements, but what this really means is that parents of pregnant minors wanting an abortion must be notified," White said.

When asked why the bill would require a description of a fetus, White said, "People should have the right to know what a medical operation entails, the risks and complications involved.

"There will probably be a debate on the matter and a role-call vote taken," said White, adding he is "fairly confident" that the bill will be passed.

Rep. James G. Collins, D-Amherst, said the informed consent bill is in the final reading stage in the House, and will go to the State Senate.

"I will vote 'no' on the bill because it is designed to set up an obstruction in terms of a woman being able to make a choice on abortion," Collins said.

A counselor from the Planned Parenthood League of Massachusetts in Cambridge, who wished to remain anonymous, called Paul White "the new darling of Right to Life groups." There was no pressure put on White to sponsor the bill because he is personally anti-choice on the abortion issue, the counselor said.

"This is a guilt and harassment type of bill, and will instill a woman with a terribly wrong feeling about having an abortion," said the counselor.

The bill may be passed in one of two forms according to the counselor. The first way would require a minor to wait 24 hours for an abortion after parental, guardian, or court consent is processed. The second form the bill may take would require a description of a fetus' growth and developmental pattern, including heartbeat and brain wave function, to be given all women before obtaining an abortion, she explained.

Cindy Goldberg of the national Abortion Rights Action League in Morthampton said an informed consent abortion law would drastically affect provisions of abortions for teenagers. It would also affect abortion counselors, doctors, nurses, hospital and clinic policies – anyone and any place connected with performing abortions, including the Amherst Medical Association, Goldberg said.

"The bill has already received two favorable readings in the House, and it will probably pass in the Senate, unless an incredible amount of pressure is exerted to stop it..and there is no doubt that (Governor) King will sign it if the bill passes the Senate," Goldberg said.

"Then," she said, "what probably will happen is that an injunction will be brought against the bill to decide on the consititutionality of it. Some parental consent for abortions laws in other states have been struck down because of unconstitutionality."

WHAT COULD THE ARMY POSSIBLY OFFER A BRIGHT PERSON LIKE YOU?

Drop your guard for a minute. Even though you're in college right now, there are many aspects of the Army that you might find very attractive.

Maybe even irresistible. See for yourself.

MED SCHOOL, ON US

You read it right.

The Army's Health Professions Scholarship Program provides necessary tuition, books, lab fees, even microscope rental during medical school.

Plus a tax-free monthly stipend that works out to about $6,450 a year. (After July 1, 1980, it'll be even more.)

After you're accepted into medical school, you can be accepted into our program. Then you're commissioned and you go through school as a Second Lieutenant in the Army Reserve.

The hitch? Very simple. After your residency, you give the Army a year as a doctor for every year the Army gave you as a med student, and under some conditions, with a minimum scholarship obligation being two years' service.

INTERNSHIP, RESIDENCY & CASH BONUSES

Besides scholarships to medical school, the Army also offers AMA-approved first-year post-graduate and residency training programs.

Such training adds no further obligation to the student in the scholarship program. But any Civilian Graduate Medical Education sponsored by the Army gives you a one-year obligation for every year of sponsorship.

But you get a $9,000 annual bonus every year you're paying back medical school or post-graduate training.

So you not only get your medical education paid for, you get extra pay while you're paying it back.

Not a bad deal.

A GREAT PLACE TO BE A NURSE

The rich tradition of Army Nursing is one of excellence, dedication, even heroism. And it's a challenge to live up to.

Today, an Army Nurse is the epitome of professionalism, regarded as a critical member of the Army Medical Team.

A BSN degree is required. And the clinical spectrum is almost impossible to match in civilian practice.

And, since you'll be an Army Officer, you'll enjoy more respect and authority than most of your civilian counterparts. You'll also enjoy travel opportunities, officer's pay and officer's privileges.

Army Nursing offers educational opportunities that are second to none. As an Army Nurse, you could be selected for graduate degree programs at civilian universities.

ADVANCED NURSING COURSE, TUITION-FREE

You get tuition, pay and living allowances.

You can also take Nurse Practitioner courses and courses in many clinical specialties. All on the Army.

While these programs do not cost you any money, most of them do incur an additional service obligation.

A CHANCE TO PRACTICE LAW

If you're about to get your law degree and be admitted to the bar, you should consider a commission in the Judge Advocate General Corps. Because in the Army you get to practice law right from the start.

While your classmates are still doing other lawyers' research and other lawyers' briefs, you could have your own cases, your own clients, in effect, your own practice.

Plus you'll have the pay, prestige and privileges of being an Officer in the United States Army. With a chance to travel and make the most of what you've worked so hard to become. A real, practicing lawyer. Be an Army Lawyer.

ROTC SCHOLARSHIPS

Though you're too late for a 4-year scholarship, there are 3-, 2-, and even 1-year scholarships available.

They include tuition, books, and lab fees. Plus $100 a month living allowance. Naturally they're very competitive. Because besides helping you towards your degree, an ROTC scholarship helps you towards the gold bars of an Army Officer.

Stop by the ROTC office on campus and ask about details.

UP TO $170 A MONTH

You can combine service in the Army Reserve or National Guard with Army ROTC and get up to $6,500 while you're still in school.

It's called the Simultaneous Membership Program. You get $100 a month as an Advanced Army ROTC Cadet and an additional $70 a month (sergeant's pay) as an Army Reservist.

When you graduate, you'll be commissioned as a Second Lieutenant, but not necessarily assigned to active duty. Find out about it.

A BONUS FOR PART-TIME WORK

You can get a $1,500 bonus just for enlisting in some Army Reserve units. Or up to $2,000 in educational benefits.

You also get paid for your Reserve duty. It comes out to about $1,000 a year for about 16 hours a month and two weeks annual training.

And now we have a special program to help you fit the Army Reserve around your school schedule. It's worth a look.

A SECOND CHANCE AT COLLEGE

Some may find college to be the right place at the wrong time for a variety of reasons. The Army can help them, too.

A few years in the Army can help them get money for tuition and the maturity to use it wisely.

The Army has a program in which money saved for college is matched two-for-one by the government. Then, if one qualifies, a generous bonus is added to that.

So 2 years of service can get you up to $7,400 for college, 3 years up to $12,100, and 4 years up to $14,100. In addition, bonuses up to $3,000 are available for 4-year enlistments in selected skills.

Add in the experience and maturity gained, and the Army can send an individual back to college a richer person in more ways than one.

We hope these Army opportunities have intrigued you as well as surprised you. Because there is indeed a lot the Army can offer a bright person like you.

AT LAST, AN ACCOUNT OF WATERGATE BY SOMEONE WITH NOTHING TO COVER UP.

Nixon, Haldeman and Ehrlichman have all told their tales. Now Judge John Sirica in TO SET THE RECORD STRAIGHT has written his revealing no-holds barred personal account of Watergate from a unique vantage point – behind the bench.

"What he couldn't stomach was hypocrisy, the smug assumption that justice was somehow different for the powerful. He wanted the truth and ultimately he got it!"

GO TO ALE

The Big Reason Beer Drinkers Are Going To Ale.

Everyday, more beer drinkers are coming around to the very special taste of Ballantine Ale. That's because Ballantine Ale is brewed to be more hardy than beer, but not thick like a malt liquor. Sure, you can expect to pay slightly more, but then Ballantine Ale is brewed to be the best there is. When you're that good, you deserve to be America's largest selling ale.

P. Ballantine, Cranston, R.I.

Many of the children who come to Ritter for help do not think that they will make it. They do not feel that they will be able to climb out from the grip which entangles them. They have been abused by their pimps – beaten, raped, and tortured. Their langour and their will to live have been dissolved.

"A kid said to me once, Bruce, can you give me one good reason why I shouldn't jump off the Brooklyn Bridge. I could not. I didn't have a reason," Ritter admits. "I made one up. He's seventeen; he can't read or write. He has no job skills. He's a hustler, a male prostitute. Ever since he's been 14 he's been selling himself up and down 42nd Street. He's jumped in a thousand cars, slept in a thousand beds. He has ulcers, parasites, he's an alcoholic. He's a very bright boy. If I thought you would understand me I would tell you he's a very good boy. But he's not going to make it and he knows it. He's only seventeen."

Gorillas defeat Dutchmen, 16-8

By JONATHAN HAMILTON
Collegian Staff

The Gorillas at Boyden yesterday came out just like the sun. Yes, that's right. Amid the sparkling, bright sunshine which shedded its clouds just before game time, the Gorillas too shedded an early two-goal deficit, provided themselves with an effective fast break with solid defense from the midfielders, and came away with a well-deserved, first-ever victory over Hofstra University, 16-8.

Jim Weller and Dave Martin were the scoring stars for UMass. Weller had four goals, three of which came in the fourth period which iced the affair. Martin's first goal put UMass ahead to stay in the second period at :54 as he took a pass from Weller off a Chris Corin rebound. Martin tallied three on the day.

As Hofstra's Vin Sombrotto and Kevin Knuckle gave the Flying Dutchmen their only lead of the game in the first period 2-0, UMass came alive on back-to-back fast break scores. First it was Corin on the receiving end of a Skip Vosburgh pass at 1:16, then :31 seconds later it was James Goodhart who took a pass from Corin and trickled the ball past Hofstra goalie Joe Fowler. After one period it was deadlocked at two apiece.

From that point on, though, it was relentless pressure put on by UMass co-captain Peter Schmitz then scored consecutive goals, the second coming off a great roll dodge firing a high shot under the cross bar. UMass scored five times in the period. At the other end of the field, co-captain Paul Kinnane, Ray Cozzi and Mark Fierro played stalwart defense, holding Hofstra to just one goal in the period. At the half it was 7-3, UMass.

In the third stanza, Hofstra made one last gasp, cutting the lead to three twice, once at 13:52 of the third (9-6), and again at 2:40 of the fourth (10-7). But both times UMass countered to stave off any Hofstra momentum.

Chimps win 2 of 3

By SHARON PANNOZZO
Collegian Staff

The UMass men's JV lacrosse team won two of its three games in the past week, dropping a 10-7 match to Brown University and defeating Williams College and Naval Academy Prep.

The team suffered defeat in its first game of the season. A high-powered, well-prepared Brown University team upset the Chimps. Coach Len Caffrey attributed the loss to a number of factors, including the cold weather and the lack of concentration by his players.

Combinging a strong offensive front with an unyielding defense, the Chimps overwhelmed Williams College 15-2, Saturday. This victory was the first of a young season, evening the team's record at 1-1.

Attacker Scott Philpott was the star for the Chimps scoring five goals.

Tuesday, the Chimps trounced a potent Naval Academy Prep. team 13-6, outshooting them 30 to 20. "It was a good game," said Caffrey, as his team posted its second consecutive victory against one loss. Assistant coaches Jeff Spooner and Steve Spelman were also very pleased with the team's performance.

Mittmen split two with URI

By MIKE ESTRADA
and STEVE COOPERMAN

KINGSTON, RI - Following the 75-degree weather of Hershey, Pennsylvania last weekend, the UMass bats went into the Rhode Island deep-freeze here yesterday as the Minutemen split a doubleheader with the Rams, 1-2 and 3-1.

After stroking 57 hits in three games in last weekend's EAA tournament, the UMass batters had only five hits in the grisly, windy surroundings of U.R.I.'s Bill Beck Field.

The Minutemen, 11-7, are on top of this week's New England College Coaches' Poll, but yesterday's split only further confuses the rankings, no Division I team in New England having established itself as the team to beat. The University of Connecticut is still in the top seven despite its less-than-awesome 10-16 record.

In the first game here yesterday, a 1-0 seventh-inning UMass lead could not be maintained by Minuteman hurler Mark Brown (3-4). The righthander, who had won his last three decisions, walked two men in the seventh before Rhode Island rightfielder Kevin Vitale delivered a two-out single to drive in two runs and give the Rams (9-11) the victory.

Brown, who considers himself a strikeout pitcher, had been effective in his last three outings by forcing infield groundouts. But the junior hurler walked seven men yesterday, a possible result of the high number of innings (almost 50) he has pitched.

"I wasn't around the plate enough to help myself," Brown said. "In the first three innings I felt good, but then I tightened up."

Meanwhile, Ram pitcher David Jansen held the Minutemen to only one hit, a two-out single by third basemen Barry Bennett in the fifth.

In the second game, UMass righty Chris Collins raised his record to 3-1, striking out six and getting out of a serious Ram threat in the sixth.

The Minutemen scored first when in the second inning Dean Bennett reached first on a fielder's choice, stole second, and scored when U.R.I. catcher Tony Carlucci threw the ball into left field on Bennett's attempted steal of third.

UMass upped its lead to 3-0 in the fourth. Bennett got things going with a double, and after leadoff hitter Doug Aylward walked, a Mark Litano single to left scored Bennett from second. Aylward, who went to third on the hit, crossed the plate after tagging up on Mike McEvilly's sacrifice fly to left.

McEvilly had already helped Collins cause in the second by throwing out Carlucci at the plate. The UMass centerfielder barehanded Joe Pirrello's single and fired the ball to catcher Dave Oleksak to save a run.

The Minutemen will play again today, a single game against Holy Cross in Worcester.

Trackwomen fall to UVM

By JAMES M. GRAHAM
Collegian Staff

The UMass women's track team lost to the University of Vermont yesterday afternoon by a score of 77-50 at UMass' Derby Track. Aided by sunny skies and temperatures in the sixties, several UMass women turned in outstanding individual performances, setting both personal and school records in their events.

UMass fell behind the superior weight women of UVM at the beginning of the meet when the Catamounts swept both the shotput and the discus events despite some strong efforts by UMass. "We figured that UVM would be tough because they usually are so strong in the weight events," coach Arnie Morse said.

The highlight for UMass in the field events came in the javelin in which Karen Snow set a new UMass record with a winning throw of 139'11". Snow will travel to the Penn. Relays today with UMass' top distance runner Judy McCrone who did not compete against UVM.

UMass picked up a first place in the long jump with a leap of 16'5 1/2" by sophomore Micki Callahan. UMass' Julie Horgan was the only UMass competitor to place in the high jump with a leap of 4'10" which was good for third. "Overall, UVM was very strong in the field events, but we had some super performances in the running events," Morse said.

Taking two important firsts in the sprints and setting a new UMass record in the 220-yard-dash was senior Diana Sealy. Sealy's time of 25.5 for the 220-yard-dash bettered the old record by four-tenths of a second. UMass Donna Beaudreau took third in that event with a 26.5. Before her record-setting run, Sealy took first in the quarter-mile with a time of 59.3 with UMass' Julie Bubon taking third in 65.1.

In the 100 meters UMass Angie Caouette took second in 13.0 and teammate Micki Callahan took third in 13.1. Callahan later placed second in the 110-meter high hurdles with a time of 15.8 "Micki Callahan ran some super times today along with Donna Quinn who came in second in the 400-meter low hurdles in 1:11.9," coach Morse said. UMass Liz Gonzalez ran to a close third place finish in the 400-meter low hurdles with a time of 1:12.7.

The distance events were dominated by UVM's Judy St. Hilaire who won both the half-mile and mile. Cyndi Martin and Karolyn Shea of UMass finished a close second and third to St. Hilaire in the half-mile with times of 2:15.7 and 2:21.8 respectively. Trisha Moores of UMass placed third in the mile in 5:22.8, but came back to win the two-mile later with a time of 11:19 in a close race against two UVM runners.

UM astronomers make pulsar find

By CHRISTOPHER H. SCHMITT
Collegian Staff

A team of UMass radio astronomers are scheduled to announce Monday the discovery of a binary pulsar, a find expected to provide information on the life history of stars.

That in turn could give scientists a clearer view of what lies ahead for our own sun in the distant future.

A three-man team led by Astronomy Prof. Joseph H. Taylor is expected to announce the discovery to the annual meeting of the American Physical Society in Washington. In late 1978, a team also led by Taylor announced the discovery of the first binary pulsar known, one which provided the first experimental evidence backing Albert Einstein's predition of the existence of gravity waves.

Pulsars are believed to be the remains of dying stars that have exploded and collapsed, leaving behind rapidly spinning remnants so dense that a teaspoonful of the material might weigh a million tons.

They emit intense and regular bursts of radio energy, rather like ticks of a clock, and are not visible in the nighttime sky.

The binary pulsar discovered by Taylor's team orbits around another massive star about once every 24 hours. Although stars with orbiting companions are quite common, pulsars have most always been found to be solitary objects in space, Taylor said. The newly discovered object is only the third orbiting pulsar known.

About 320 pulsars are known to exist, Taylor said, and about two-thirds of them have been discovered by astronomers from UMass.

Taylor said the new pulsar is expected to shed light on the evolution and life-cycle of stars. Pairs of orbiting stars have always been important in astronomy, he said, because measurements of how they interact with each other gravitationally provide the only method of "weighing" stars.

Resulting measurements of the masses of stars allow astronomers to study the lives of stars. Taylor said he expects the newly discovered orbiting pulsar will help in those studies.

Observations of the pulsar were made by Taylor and graduate students Peter R. Backus and Marc Damashek, at the 300-foot radio telescope of the National Radio Astronomy Observatory at Green Bank, W. Va.

The object lies in the constellation Camelopardalis about 1000 light years from earth, not far from the better-known "Big Dipper." Calculations show the pulsar's orbit is roughtly 1 million miles in diameter, and the object moves at a speed of close to 200,000 miles per hour.

Taylor's 1978 announcement followed four years of observation of a pulsar pair about 15,000 light years from earth. That pulsar is known to be orbiting another massive object — perhaps another pulsar — because its regular "beeps" of emmission speed up and slow down over a regular pattern lasting a little less that 8 hours.

Einstein's theory predicts that such a system should emit gravitational waves, which in turn slowly extract energy from the orbit, causing the pulsar and its compa-

Rally held for program

By JANE DEVIRGILIO
and BRIAN FITZ MAURICE
Collegian Staff

A "Spring Offensive" rally, aimed at the Administration's failure to approve Women's Studies as a separate degree program reached an attentive, responsive crowd of ever-increasing size yesterday afternoon in the Student Union Ballroom. The rally brought together faculty, students, and interested supporters of the program to hear songs, speeches, and readings illustrating to listeners the need for and fortitude of such a field of study.

The Women's Studies Program, now a part of the Bachelor's Degree in Individual Concentration Program (BDIC) is currently awaiting action by the Chancellor's office on their demand to grant a bachelor's degree separate from the auspices of BDIC. They have been awaiting the Chancellor's decision since the March Faculty Senate meeting when Provost Jerry Allen said he had made a decision on the program, but could not reveal it since the Chancellor is currently making his decision.

Catherine Portugese, academic coordinator and initiator of the program since its conception six years ago, said at the outset of the rally "every academic channel has been gone through. The Faculty Senate has voiced its support, the program has proved itself nationally and on this campus. No questions have been raised concerning the academic excellence of the program. It clearly deserves to continue on this campus and become an independent major."

The rally began with music by Barvara Stack, Debbie Fish, and Anne Ferguson, and was followed by a choral reading of feminist literature by over a dozen faculty and students. A group of faculty, students and supporters later strongly voiced their opinion of the validity, value and excellence of the program on the campus. Over 100 persons attended the 4-hour event.

Johnetta Cole, professor of Anthropology, expressed the sentiment of the rally when she said that "to deny the experiences of a large number of the world's community is a crime...and for this reason we need the Women's Studies Program on this campus."

Yesterday's rally follows a series of actions by the Women's Studies Program that has included letters addressed to the Chancellor from faculty and students supporting the program, cards from students supporting the program that were collected at area dining commons, and intensive lobbying of the Administration by committed supporters of the program.

Ritter: A kid has a right to be innocent

By SCOTT SOLOMON
Collegian Staff

Editor's Note: This is the second of a two-part series on Father Bruce Ritter. Tomorrow at 11 a.m., the Newman Club will sponsor a "Fun Run for Ritter," to raise money for his Covenant House. There is a post-race party scheduled for 8 p.m., at the Newman Center. The party is free to all those entered in the race, with a $3 fee for those who do not compete. Fr. Ritter will be speaking at the Student Union Ballroom on Wednesday, April 30, on the topic, "Teenage Prostitution: The Sexual Supermarket." Admission is free.

NEW YORK — It is 10:30 p.m. on a rainy St. Patrick's night. Father Bruce Ritter sits in a hard wooden chair, his bare feet propped up on the desk in his room on the fifth floor of Under 21, on Eighth Ave. He is simply dressed in a chocolate brown turtleneck and brown and white flecked pants. He has just returned from an afternoon cocktail party, and his eyes are heavy with exhaustion. His bed is a unique one—a paper-thin mattress which lies in the corner of the room, on the tile floor. There is a thin tan blanket which is rolled up and placed on one end of the mattress. His window faces the street, and the loud roar of sirens, horns, and car engines echos in his room. This year, half of Covenant House's $5.6 billion budget will be raised privately, by Ritter's untiring fundraising.

"I have to raise ten thousand dollars every day of the year," says Ritter, "or I go bankrupt. I guess it's a race between laryngitis and bankruptcy," he adds with a laugh. Ritter recalls that he had not originally chosen the child-welfare business as his profession. Rather, it chose him.

He was a Franciscan priest with a doctorate in late medieval theology, and teaching at Manhattan College in New Bronx. Then one day in 1969, after he had delivered a self-righteous sermon, asking his kids "when they were going to sell out to money, power and worldly ambition," one student confronted him. The student told the 52-year-old priest that, instead of merely preaching, priests should "Lead by their example and their lifestyle." Startled, Ritter thought about what the student had said, and realized that the youth was absolutely right.

Ritter asked his cardinal and his superiors for a new assignment—"to live and work among the poor." He was transferred to a $64-a-month apartment in a lower East Side slum. 60 of the 72 apartments in his project were occupied by junkies. At first, many of the other tenents thought Ritter was an undercover narcotics agent, posing as a priest.

'And so I kept them. Because, as they kept reminding me so pointedly, I had a bed and they did not'

UNDER 21

At 2 a.m. on one very cold, snowy Sunday, six kids, four boys and two girls, all under 16, knocked on Ritter's door. They had been burned out of the abandon building in which they had been staying, by a junkie who wanted to pimp them. They had been taken in by a couple in Yonkers, who had fed them, and then forced them to star in a porn movie. Upon returning to the lower East Side village, they had been burned out again.

The next morning one of the kids went out, bringing back four more kids with him. "This is the rest of us," the boy told Ritter, "The rest of our family."

After a near frantic search—calling 24 child care agencies, the priest realized that nobody wanted the 10 kids whom he was housing in a slum on the East Side.

"The kids were too old, too young, too sick, not sick enough," remembers Ritter. "The real reason was quite simple. Nobody in New York operated a program for young prostitutes and young hustlers. And so I kept them. Because, as they kept reminding me so pointedly, I had a bed and they did not."

Finally, Ritter realized he needed more space than was being provided in this project on the East Side. And in 1972, upon becoming a licensed child care agency, he began working to find a place to open his "business." Under 21 opened its doors in 1977, in the middle of a 15-block area around Times Square. Two years later, Ritter took over the Manhattan Rehabilitation Center on 10th Ave. and 41st St., and renamed the three building complex Covenant House. The asking price, courtesy of Governor Hugh Carey and the state of New York: $1 a year for ten years.

The successes of Covenant House have been tremendous. It is now a household word among the kids in the Times Square area—the kids who are in trouble with the law, the kids that have an addiction to drugs, the kids that have been exposed to prostitution. In the last three years Covenant House has reunited 1200 runaway kids with their parents. But there are many youngsters who are not as fortunate.

"Most of the time when we call the parents of a runaway and tell them we have their son or daughter, the answer we get back is 'We don't want them, you keep them. If you send them home we'll have them arrested,'" Ritter says. "So I tell the kid, 'Your mother says it's O.K. if you stay with me.' But he knows what it means. He knows that he has just been turned into an orphan."

Not only does Fr. Ritter have to think about the present situation in and around the Times Square area, but he must work to limit problems in the future, contending with the six elementary schools attended by hundreds of city kids in a ten-block area and the theatre district.

"Kids have to walk to school every day, up and down Eighth Ave, and 42nd St. measuring the size of dildos in the windows when they're four and five years old," he says. "Doesn't a kid have a right to be innocent, doesn't a kid have a right to be a kid these days?"

Anderson announces independent status

By MIKE SHANAHAN
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Republican John B. Anderson became an independent candidate for president yesterday, appealing for the support of voters so disenchanted by the prospect of a Carter-Reagan choice this fall that they might stay home on Election Day.

In Austin, Texas, Republican front-runner Ronald Reagan said there was "a terrible possibility" that Anderson's reborn candidacy might throw the November election into the House of Representatives.

Reagan said he was not seriously concerned it might happen, but if it did — with Democrats holding the majority in the House — "it's pretty obvious what would happen."

White House press secretary Jody Powell said it was too early to predict the impact of an independent Anderson candidacy on President Carter's bid for re-election. Neither would he say whether the Carter campaign would go to court in an attempt to keep Anderson's name off the November ballots.

Abandoning his 10-month-long quest for the Republican presidential nomination at a news conference at the National Press Club, Anderson said:

"There is current statistical evidence that virtually one-half of potential voters are dissatisfied with a choice between President Carter and Ronald Reagan."

The Illinois congressman said he would seek to "broaden the choice available to millions of potential voters who simply do not participate in party primaries and caucuses."

He said he believes he can attract many Americans who would otherwise sit out the general election and not vote for either major party nominee.

Anderson repeatedly disputed contentions that an independent candidacy will make him a spoiler who could not win, but might give the election to one of the two major party nominees.

Aides said Anderson would begin his independent run for the White House with appearances in New York City, Atlanta, Charleston, W.Va., Detroit, Lansing, Mich., and Boston, starting this weekend.

State petition drive on

Students and other volunteers have already collected 12,000 signatures in an effort to get newly-announced Independent presidential candidate John Anderson on the Massachusetts ballot in November, Anderson's office in Boston said last night.

1200 of these signatures have been collected at UMass, according to senior Peter Torkildsen, who is coordinating the local effort for Anderson.

This weekend, students will be continuing their efforts in the area by canvassing for signatures at malls in Hadley, Springfield, and Holyoke, Torkildsen said.

He said anyone interested in helping with the petition drive should meet in the Campus Center Coffee Shop at 9 a.m. Saturday.

Anderson's supporters need to get 39,245 verified signatures from registered voters in the state by May 6 to get their candidate's on the ballot in November.

The colloquium will look into the women's movement and its relation to racism as well as the economic structure of the country and institutional racial foundations.

The course will also deal with racism in dormitory life which will feature a question and answer period coordinated by several heads of residence from the Southwest area. Information will be shared on what is being done to fight racism on the UMass campus.

Registration for the colloquium will begin tomorrow at 9 a.m. in Hampden Commons in Southwest. The course will run for 16 hours, eight hours each on Saturday and Sunday.

No-nukers set for D.C.march

By ABBE BJORKLUND
Collegian Staff

Two buses, two vans, cars, and assorted hitchhikers will depart UMass today to join thousands of people from around the country in Washington D.C. The occasion is a rally and march organized by the Coalition for A Non-Nuclear Future for Saturday, and a Student Meeting Against Nukes on Sunday.

The demands of the rally goers are: Zero Nuclear Weapons, Stop Nuclear Power, Honor Native American Treaties, Full Employment, and Safe Energy. The participants will meet at the Capitol Building and march to the Washington Monument, where a variety of speakers and musicians will perform.

The student conference will be at American University and was organized by theStudent Coalition Against Nukes Nationwide (SCANN). Alan Campagnon, UMass student and N.E. Regional Treasurer for SCANN, said of the conference: "It is important as we start out the 80's that students communicate to find a sense of where we are at around the country. We're trying to formulate a comprehensive strategy for a student movement organized around broad issues."

UMass students said they are going to Washington for a variety of reasons. "I am going to say no to nukes in a place where it is visible to people in power. I want to meet people from around the country and see what they are doing to fight nukes," SCANN member Dave Morgan said.

Naomi Edelson, a Wildlife Biology major, said: "The rally is a catalyst — an energy creator — that brings everyone together and makes something big. We'll get a lot of press; we'll show the whole country that we have strength to fight the nukes."

UM may lose Board in '82

By BRIAN O'CONNELL
Collegian Staff

The UMass Board of Trustees may be replaced by a statewide Board of Regents by 1982, UMass Vice-Chancellor for Administration and Finance George Beatty told the Faculty Senate yesterday.

The Massachusetts House of Representatives voted last week to phase out the Boards of Trustees of state colleges and regional community colleges in Massachusetts in 1981, replacing them with the proposed Board of Regents. The House vote did not include the three state Universities -- UMass, Lowell or Southeastern -- in its Board of Regents plan.

Beatty told the senate the proposed elimination of the State and Community college Boards was a part of the Legislature's statewide reorganization of higher education beginning in 1981.

"Reorganization only indirectly affected UMass this time around, Beatty said.

In other Senate business, UMass School of Business professor Joanne Hill said she was "dismayed and upset" by recent efforts by University Administrators to decide on whether to approve or reject the proposed Women's Studies major.

The major was passed by the Faculty Senate in May 1978, and was subsequently approved by then Chancellor Randolph Bromery and Acting Provost Jerry Allen. When the proposed major reached the desk of then UMass President Robert C. Wood, the question of additional funding for the major arose. The Women's studies major continued for two years, with the question of funding still unresolved.

"I hope this will not be standard treatment to Faculty Senate recommendations" by the University Administration, Hill said, adding, "and I hope this issue hasn't been singled out by the administration."

BOG approves budget

By MICHAEL FOLEY
Collegian Staff

The Campus Center Board of Governors last night approved the University Administration's proposal for a $8,317,100 budget for the Campus Center/Student Union Complex next year.

The approval came after little Board examination of the proposal, however, due to personnel problems. Earlier this year, the chairman of the committee responsible for examining the budget resigned, leaving the committee non-functional for much of the year, according to BOG Treasurer Larry Ruth.

The board promised renewed dedication in the area next year, however, now that a new Finance Committee Chairman has been elected. Ken Zimmerman, a junior finance major was elected to fill the post last night.

The Board last night also created a new committee, Retail Services, to deal with services in the complex such as the University Store. This will provide the Board with specialized financial information, according to ex-Board member Scott Brown.

The Board also approved preliminary plans for renovations to the Top of the Campus Restaurant, which are estimated to cost $100,000. The renovations are expected to include a bar with a green marble top and brass foot rail and a ceiling with suspended lighting.

Money for the renovations will come from Auxilary Services, which grossed 1.6 million last summer from a single Transcendental Meditation conference held in the building.

Other new committee chairs are: Operations-Lori Dratch; Personnel-Tim Petter; Space-Peter Lucas; Food services-Greg Dennis; Economic development-Peter Tagart; Constitution-John Furbish; Communications-Sandy Gricco; UPC representative-Nancy Seraphin; and Governors Program Council-Jay Blue, Greg Dennis and Marshall Wienburg.

Census redistributed

Every student living in residence halls, fraternities, and sororities will be receiving another census form Monday, the Springfield Office of the Census Bureau announced yesterday.

The additional forms are being sent out because many students have not returned the forms sent out earlier this month, the Bureau said. They are to be returned by Wed. April 30 by Campus Mail.

According to UMass Coordinator of Community Relations Gerry Grady, it is important students return the forms if they have not already because it could affect the amount of federal funds for which the state and University are entitled.

Shots are available

The Student Health Advisory Board and the University Health Center will be sponsoring a two-day immunization promotion campaign on Monday and Tuesday, April 28 and 29. Students interested in receiving immunizations to various diseases should sign up at a table on the Campus Center concourse and will then be directed where to go for the shots.

Spring Concert '80 student tickets will be available on 4/22, 4/23, 4/24, 4/25, 4/28 only: in Hampden Commons.

Black Affairs

Television and Racism

[An Apri News Release]

In many important respects, American society has overcome the coarse and crude racism of the recent past. Most people, except the most ignorant and provincial, are now will to accept black citizens as equals, as neighbors and as co-workers. Today, we can find blacks and whites living and working together in harmony where only 20 or 30 years ago they lived separate existences, never crossing their paths on equal terms.

With the overall improvements in race relations, many of the old stereotypes about black people have disappeared. No longer do we have degrading spectacles like the Amos and Andy shows, shuffling black men, and happy, singing slaves entertaining their lovable white masters. But while blatant racial type-casting has become socially unacceptable, racism lingers on in some subtle but no less demeaning ways. I realized this several weeks ago when I switched on the television and watched an episode of a new NBC program called Skag.

Since the program, which stars Karl Malden, supposedly depicts the daily life of an East Pittsburg steelworker, I thought it might be interesting. After all, workers, whether they be black or white, receive little or no attention from the mass media except for occasional attacks against their unions, alleged greed, and crude lifestyles. Unfortunately, Skag turned out to be more of a caricature than a fair and sensitive portrayal of blue-collar life. Worse still, the writers and producers of Skag present black people in a particularly unfavorable light. Indeed, all the old stereotypes are there – blacks are stupid, subservient to whites, and flunkies who are willing to do anything for a quick buck.

TEHRAN—FASTING FOR HOSTAGES—American comedian and human rights activist Dick Gregory talks to newsmen in Tehran Tuesday. Gregory has started a fast in an effort to bring about the release of the American hostages held in the U.S. Embassy. He said he has been fasting since his arrival on April 19. (AP Laserphoto)

In an episode about a wildcat strike to protest unsafe working conditions, only two blacks have speaking roles. One of the black characters is a union official, obviously as Uncle Tom, who is sent to Peter Skagska's plant to undermine the strike and to reassure management. The other black character is one of the strikers who sides with Skagska. In his big part, the black man does nothing but repeat the words and ideas of Skagska, the white foreman who heroically defends the interests of the workers. In short, both black men are depicted as idiots who are incapable of independent thought, who have no capacity for intelligent leadership, and who are willing to sell-out to whatever side offers the best price.

Apparently, the writers of Skag have never heard of A. Philip Randolph and the Brotherhood of Sleeping Car Porters. After years of relentless and sometimes hopeless struggle, Randolph and the small band of black porters won their rights from the huge Pullman Company. They did it on their own; they relied on their own creativity and resources. But seeing the blacks in Skag, a viewer might easily conclude that blacks can do nothing on their own, or that blacks have never done anything on their own.

The "stage blacks" of Skag also insult the thousands of black steelworkers who hold elected posts in the United Steelworkers of America, a union which has an outstanding civil rights record. Blacks, who make up over 25 percent of the work force in the basic steel industry, have played an increasingly important role in the union. But as Skag presents it, blacks seem to be an insignificant force in steel production.

Aside from the subtle and refined racism of Skag, the program has other serious flaws. Rather than attempting an honest and balanced depiction of working-class life, the program offers up an array of distortions. Since Skag's writers and producers seem to think that ordinary working-class life is dull, uneventful and lacking in vitality, they "spice up" reality with a little prostitution, alcoholism, an abortion here and there, and other sordid events. In a way, they probably think that they are liberating workers from what must be a boring life. But such liberation is an act of condescension, an exercise in lecturing the unwashed masses (in this case, workers) about what real living is all about. But black people and workers can do without lectures from the "better class."

Since workers support the television industry by purchasing the products of sponsors, the industry has a duty to produce programs which do not insult the very people whose sweat keeps the industry alive. Skag, despite its stated intention of promoting a better understanding of the working-class, is one program that is especially insulting, and NBC would do us a favor by junking it.

A turn for the Better

A TURN FOR THE BETTER

On Wednesday, The Third World Women's Center took their meeting up the hill to the Orchard Hill Cultural Center. Going in there pessimistic about the turnout, we were pleasantly surprised at the fact that 7 women did show up to find out about the Center. And to top it off 6 men came to show their support!!!

Overall, it was an exciting discussion, because people were enthusiastic about getting involved. A couple of significant points were brought up about Third World Organizations in general:

1. Many freshman come in scared and unaware, and need the support and guidance of those who have been at the University awhile.

2. They (freshmen) feel discouraged at the meetings, because they are all talk and no one wants to take on responsibility.

3. A workshop on LEADERSHIP should be held to get the maximum benefit out of organizing our groups.

4. DON'T feel you have to belong to only 1 organization and devote 20 hours a week of your time. They all need your support and the amount of time you want to give is entirely up to you.

5. Groups should expose themselves during freshman orientation over the summer to encouraged incoming students.

6. Rotating your meetings to various areas, helps to encourage the use of resources which aren't being used sufficiently (like the Cultural Centers in the areas).

Next Wednesday, April 30 at 7:30 pm, another recruiting effort will be held at the Malcolm X Center. We really think you'll enjoy it and we'll all learn something. So come out and show your support to the Women's Center or GET INVOLVED in some of the other Third World Organizations that need your help!

Chuck Mangione

REVIEW

By JULIE EAGLE
Collegian Staff

The sweet sounds of jazz filled the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall Tuesday night when flugelhorn artist Chuck Mangione and his Quartet captivated a near-capacity audience. The Jazz elites kept listeners snapping their fingers for three hours while playing an almost hypnotic array of songs old and new, some commissioned by ABC Sports for its coverage of the 1980 Olympics at Lake Placid.

The performance opened with a light and airy tune featuring excellent mastery of the saxophone by Chris Vadala, who Mangione later introduced as "the man on everything from Poughkeepsie, NY". Those words rang true throughout the concert, as Vadala moved from saxophone

Iran threatens to close gulf

By The Associated Press

Iran threatened yesterday to cut off the West's vital Persian Gulf oil lifeline if the United States mines Iranian ports.

"We shall close the Persian Gulf at any price," Foreign Minister Sadegh Ghotbzadeh said in an interview with Iranian radio and television.

He did not say just how the Iranians might try to halt the supertanker traffic out of the gulf, which accounts for some 60 percent of all world oil exports. But if they succeeded, it would abruptly cut off 10 percent of the United States' oil, and higher proportions for Western Europe and Japan.

The threat came as the Iranians edged closer to the Soviet Union economically in the face of growing Western pressure to win the freedom of the U.S. Embassy hostages.

The Soviets confirmed they would open their highway system to increased Iranian traffic if President Carter orders a blockade of Iranian seaports, and they announced they were resuming suspended negotiations to buy Iranian natural gas.

The war in rebellious Kurdistan raged on, meanwhile. A Turkish newspaper report told of hundreds killed in attacks by the Iranian air force, and a Kurdish group appealed to world organizations for help.

In Tehran, the 50 American hostages spent their 173rd day in captivity.

President Carter said last week military action would be the next U.S. option if economic and diplomatic pressure by America and its allies did not lead to the hostages' release. The principal tactic under consideration is a sea blockade, most likely by mining Iranian ports.

A monkey wrench for president?

MARK WAGNER

The monkey wrench is a tool with an adjustable jaw used for loosening and tightening nuts and bolts. Yet, when taken to the streets, besides being used to bop old ladies with Social Security checks, the monkey wrench is associated with bringing any functioning system to a grinding halt. So it is with the two party system. Throw a strong independent candidate into the national election and what do you get? Candy coated Reagan, rotting peanuts and surprise.

John Anderson is an adjustable representative with a well oiled jaw used for pulling strings and pushing politics to make the two party system work. Yet when he takes to the stump, John Anderson can be a very formidable monkey wrench.

This should come as no real surprise, as Anderson has been an aspiring monkey wrench throughout the campaign. He's given pollsters headaches through confutation of their configurations. And regardless of pleas and attacks from the Republican Party heirarchy, he continues to campaign to democrats and independents as well as republicans. And on a number of occasions, particularly in Massachusetts and Vermont, Anderson showed increasing wrench-like qualities by threatening Ronald Reagan's "Mo."

Now Anderson has worked himself into a position to do some serious system-stopping stumping. After disconnecting George Bush's spark plugs, creating minor wiring problems for Ronald Reagan, and putting rattles in the Republican Party, Anderson and his wrench are considering a major overhaul of Jimmy Carter and the Democratic Limo.

Let's take a look at Anderson's "How to Wrench the Two Party System for the Complete Idiot" plan.

If the campaign to date were a movie, the more fitting director would be Jimmy Carter. Coming back from abyssmal ratings, the president swamps the party disloyal in the primaries. On the republican side, the masses continue to push for the nomination of the unelectable Ronald Reagan. The president need only worry about republicans with national appeal. His fears were quelled with the early withdrawal of Howard Baker and the quieting of Anderson's threat in the Midwest. Enter the monkey wrench that ate the democrats.

Due to his appeal, Anderson has proved able to attract across party lines and is now running as a candidate for the Independent Party. The third party ticket choice was most likely influenced by four factors: 1. His desire to unseat Jimmy Carter, 2. His distaste for the policies of Ronald Reagan, 3. Loyalty to his supporters, and 4. The continuity of his "new politics" in the national limelight.

The Independent Party candidacy will certainly spell defeat for Jimmy Carter. Since Anderson has continually been a haven for disenchanted voters, the Anderson alternative will draw mainly from the Carter Camp.

On the other hand Ronald Reagan will be dressing up his ticket to take to the national election. He will select a young, moderate, nationally recognized republican senator in Howard Baker – the second man the Democrats fear. Reagan may go as far as to modify some of his hardline stands or perhaps make amends with Henry K. Also, aided by the conservative mood of the country, along with the Independent candidate, Reagan might be considered able to win the big one; the unelectable elected.

Can a monkey wrench win the national election? The closest the independents came was when the monkey wrench was a Bull Moose and Theo Roosevelt captured 25 percent of the vote. So, the chances are very slim. But this is a funny year.

Why make distinctions?

TONY SCIOLI

Now that it is spring and time for our annual spring concert, I would like to stick my neck out and ask some questions regarding the procedures involved in the selection of the various acts.

There's no reason to be conservative, avoid criticism and feign sanity. I might as well say what's on my mind—my intentions are good.

First of all, who picks who plays here? Second, who pays for who plays here? Third, is there even a remote relationship between the two?

My naive, uninformed Euclidian mind tells me there is not. It also tells me what there could be; potential acts could be voted on by the entire campus population.

My next question is one which may shorten my lifespan if not taken as I intend. My question is: Must we have a series of acts to represent the various segments of the student population? Wouldn't it be better to get one big act? Again, my uninformed naive, Euclidian mind tells me that a concert is a place where you go to listen to music – not a place you go to be represented. I realize this is in direct opposition to the "no instrumentation without representation" movement, but I think we have to go beyond that. Unity comes not through segregation but through intergration. Unity comes through common interest. Music is one of these common interests.

I realize this is in direct opposition to the "no instrumentation without representation" movement, but I think we have to go beyond that.

It is obvious that not everybody likes Freddie Blassie and the Geekettes, however if popular vote demanded it, the concert could be divided up according to different types of music, i.e. pop, rock, jazz. You don't have to have a band for left-handed people, Marxists or vegetarians. I don't think it helps matters to keep making distinctions within a population when the issue is a common interest. On the other hand if you break things up by race or sex, it can become unequal depending on who's available, how much they want and what you can afford.

Letters

Negativeness detracts

To the Editor:

A number of issues have plagued our campus in recent months, issues which concern discrimination and racism. SCERA's Anti-Racism Team criticized the Collegian's April 1, 1980 issue as being "racist, sexist, disgustingly inhumane, insensitive, and an infantile collection of trash." Members of the Coalition for Public Improvement in Public Radio occupied Chancellor Koffler's office and demanded that the Spanish program "Que Tal Amigos" be restored to prime time on radio station WFCR. Phillippe Scott, spokesperson for the group had stated, "We are accusing Mr. Goldfarb (station manager) of being racist, arrogant, and insensitive to Spanish Americans." A number of UMass professors wrote a letter to the editor (April 2, 1980) stating their fear that campus anti-semitism "given the respectability by a few, may gain acceptance by the many." Finally, Nummo News' front page headline of April 22, 1980 read, "Racism in the Everywoman's Center."

Perhaps there have been incidents of anti-semitism and racism on campus and individuals have been unjustly wronged. However, I believe the vast majority of UMass students are intolerant of such attitudes. I don't believe that the "anti-social views" of which Chancellor Koffler spoke last December are widespread and ingrained within the UMass community. I was personally shocked when I read of Mr. Koffler's statement in the December 7, 1980 Collegian that a major drive was in order at UMass to raise the level of "civility and respect among persons on this campus." Rather, I believe a major drive is in order to eliminate the negativeness which has permeated this campus.

It appears that some campus groups claiming to be victims of racism and discrimination truly have their own personal interests at heart rather than those of the UMass community. I don't pretend to believe that racism is nonexistent on campus, but neither do I believe that the majority of UMass students lack civility and respect toward each other. I urge that constructive efforts be initiated to project a more just image of the UMass community as a whole. One would hope that equal acknowledgement be given of UMass' assets, as has been given of its liabilities.

Mike LaDouceur

RA's responsible

To the R.A.'s of Southwest,

Your letter of April 24 beseeching the support of the student body in your cause was unconvincing. Indeed you should work the weekend of Spring Concert and indeed you should be paid. This is a legitimate gripe. You fear the erosion of your staff's credibility, yet by leveling petty threats of "adverse conditions" during Spring Concert, room choosing, and semester closing, you have handed your credibility to the wind.

As Resident Assistants, one main role is liaison between students and administration. In threatening the demise of this and future Spring Concerts as well as room choosing, you will only be rewarded with student animosity. In threatening the administration with difficulty in semester closing you will elicit a response much like mine when a mosquito buzzes my ear at night.

You were chosen for a position demanding responsibility and an understanding of complex human problems; stamping your feet and shouting as an infant deprived of candy does will gain you no credibility—only attack from both flanks.

Amherst Earth Day

To the Editor

Saturday, April 26, is being celebrated as Earth Day in Amherst, and UMass students are invited to join in the day's events.

In the morning, community groups will be volunteering an hour or two to Clean-Up Day, picking up litter around their neighborhoods and along the town streets. This is an annual campaign to keep Amherst clean and green. Last year over 300 people helped out, including UMass students, and since this year is the tenth anniversary of the original Earth Day, we hope even more people will be inspired to do some practical environmental improvement.

Saturday afternoon, April 26, there will be Arbor Day events on the East Street common (opposite Fort River school), musicians, a tree planting, and a talk by Amherst's state Representative Jim Collins, former president of the UMass Student Senate. Ceremonies start at 1:00, but come early and bring a picnic lunch. At 2:00 buses will leave the common for environmental tours around Amherst – historic trees, solar energy installations, and a hike through one of the Conservation Areas.

Join with other Amherst residents on April 26 for Arbor Day, Clean-Up Day, and Earth Day.

★ Rally

Jules Chemetsky, representative of the Massachusetts Society of Professors on campus, said the efforts of the Women's Studies Program is "the opening wedge to reorganize the educational offerings of this University," and that unity is needed to prevent the Administration from pitting the various movements on campus against each other.

At the close of the rally, singer and professor of Philosophy Anne Ferguson said she thought "the rally was a good indication of the vitality of the program. The diversity of the speakers and supporters exemplified the program's ability to serve an interdisciplinary function at UMass."

nion to move closer together. As the size of the orbit decreases, the time needed to complete an orbit also decreases.

According to Taylor, relativity theory predicts that the length of time for the orbit should be decreased by about one-ten-thousandth of a second per year. Taylor found that over four years, the time required for an orbit had decreased by four ten-thousandths of a second, nearly precisely the time predicted by Einstein's work 60 year's earlier.

enthusiastically received concert Mangione is keyed-up and upon meeting—is instantly likeable.

Mangione, 37, slightly built and bearded, with shoulder length brown hair, wears the feather-banded brimmed hat that has become his trademark. It appears neither the horn or the hat is far from the man; neither is his smile.

In the same boyish manner he chats with his audience, Mangione said he does not identify with "stardom." He said, "It is nice to have a whole lot of people like the music, but it is not so much fun not be considered a regular person. It's hard to walk down the street without being recognized," he said.

Mangione said he is "certainly thrilled people like his music. I wish more musicians gave tours. Live performances take people away; allows them to use their imagination, especially with instrumental music."

Before his third appearance at the UMass Fine Arts Center Concert Hall Mangione said he was able to walk around Amherst and relax.

He said, "I honestly and truely love the town. It is lovely here." But he added, "I have a hard time playing in this hall because of all the cement; it's not right for our music. But, the people always seem to make up for it."

When asked if young musicians should attend college or pursue their music solely, Mangione said, "You should get yourself as together as possible. For some people that's attending college."

He said he regrets having decided his future when he was young. "I had already decided everything I was going to do. I knew who I was going to marry, my religious beliefs, and what music I was going to play.Sometimes when you're young that's kind of foolish. I know people who feel bad if they haven't made it by 21. But now I stay as open-minded as possible." Mangione advised people to "Be like a sponge. Taste everything and don't make financial or other choices that would limit your creative or artistic fun," he said.

"Give it all you got," is his philosophy of life as well as the title of his newest hit song and the ABC Sports Theme for the 1980 Winter Olympics.

Mangione has always credited his father as the important factor in making possible his development into a jazz musician.

to clarinet to piccolo to maraca to tambourine to several types of flutes with ease and proficiency.

Addressing the audience casually, Mangione introduced his four-man crew which, along with Vadala, included Charles Meeks on bass and harmonica, Carol Locket on guitar and James Bradley on drums.

"The Eleventh Commandment," from the groups album Feels So Good, was one of the most fast-paced songs of the concert, featuring a spirited disco beat and a successful blend of light guitar and hearty bass. Bradley's superb drum solo was enhanced by rhythmic clapping of the others.

The show's first vocal sounds were introduced in "Pina Colada," with Mangione repeatedly singing "B...B...B...B...Da...Da." The same snappy beat also sparked the Concert Hall when the group went into the title song from Fun and Games. As Mangione and Vadala went from one instrument to the next with creamy smooth transitions, the tune remained consistently upbeat, less erratic than some of the other pieces.

Meek's sweet voice complemented "Bella Via", which Mangione had told the audience, "I wrote for my mother." This tune, which featured excellent marching band sounds from Bradley's guitar, was followed by the group's finale, the popular title song from Feels So Good. The band's marvelous interspersal of solo and group playing had this reviewer feeling grateful for the song, which Mangione earlier said, "introduced our music to a whole lot of people."

Black

By SUSAN RING
Special to the Collegian

Cinematographer Caleb Deschanel has given us two hours of visual delight in The Black Stallion. From the vibrant disaster early in the film, to beautifully choreographer romping on a secluded beach, and the climactic race which wraps up the film, Dschanel maintains a standard of excellence equalling that of Days of Heaven. The range and depth of color, the capture of exquisitely sculptured nature; these are the film's major assets.

Stallion: Worth your while

Francis Ford Coppola's latest extravaganza, Black Stallion is family fare in the traditon of a good Disney feature. It is an adventure in which a horse saves the life of a young boy. They naturally become inseparable, and are of course occasionally separated.

Kelly Reno plays Alec Ramsey, the boy who tames the massive Arabian stallion. Reno is freckled and cute but does not express much emotion: his character is rather flat. He is not given a substantial amount of dialogue. In fact, he is of most interest during the firt half of the film as the action tells the story. Mickey Rooney gives a legitimate performance as Henry Dailey, an ex-jockey and horse trainer who teams up with Alec and "The Black." Rooney is pudgy and cute but was nonetheless nominated for an academy award for his performance.

"The Black" is gorgeous, a fiercely impressive animal. He has the elegance of the precious miniature sculpture of the horse of Alexander the Great, which was given to Alex by his father. Along with the miniature horse Alec's father delivered an inspired account of the legend of young Alexander's taming of this exceptional horse. Alec and "The Black" are destined to relive this legend. With the advent of his father's death, this fantastic dream becomes all important to Alec.

The G rating on the film should not cause it to be overlooked.

Mittwomen take two, men tie

By MELISSA GALLAGHER

The UMass softball team passed what coach Elaine Marasco called "the first real test" of the season with flying colors yesterday afternoon. The 12-0 Minutewomen defeated UConn at home, 3-1, 4-3, snapping the Huskies nine-game winning streak. UConn is now 18-4.

Rhonda McManus, in her first contest since injuring her knee in pre-season, provided the scoring punch with a three-run triple in the fourth frame of game one. With two strikes, McManus hit a change up to break Cheryl Hobart's string of 54 consecutive innings without relinquishing an earned run. Scoring were Simmons, who had reached on an error, Kathy O'Connell, who singled, and Fran Cornacchioli, who beat out an infield hit.

Sue Peters held UConn scoreless until the seventh when the Huskies put the trying run on second base. Kim Longo was plated by Mary Beth Curtis' double, but she and Lauren Fuchs were stranded after Fuchs walked and both advanced on a wild pitch.

UConn's other threat came in the first. With runners on first and third catcher Jackie Gaw picked off a runner attempting to steal third.

Similar to the first contest, hurler O'Connell staved off Uconn's late inning offense to hang on to her sixth victory. The Huskies tallied two in the sixth, cutting UMass' margin to 4-2, before UConn added another and stranded two in the final frame. Short stop Cornacchioli made a good throw from the hole to second basewoman Karen LaVeriere to force a pinch-hitter out. O'Connell surrended two singles before securing the last two outs.

UMass' scoring in the second game off of O'Connell's leadoff triple, an error, McManus's bunt single, Fran Troy's sacrifice, a wild pitch and Mary Ann Lombardi's RBI base hit.

What turned out to be the eventual game winning tally resulted from Cornacchioli's triple, which was a bullet down the left field line. McManus' single up the middle produced UMass' last run.

Marasco, who considers UConn and URI to be the most difficult squads her team will oppose, said she was "impressed" with her ball player's defense and offense. Cornacchioli said that UConn exhibited the toughest pitching she had faced during the regular season thus far.

Last year UConn blemished UMass' otherwise perfect season of 23-0-1 record with a deadlock called in extra innings because of darkness.

"Bitch!" came the exclamation of frustration from the back of the UMass van. Again, "Bitch!"

UMass pitcher Chuck Thompson hurled the equivalent of a college doubleheader yesterday in Worcester but all he got for his effort was a 3-3 tie in a battle with the Holy Cross Crusaders. The game was stopped at 6:07 pm because of darkness after 14 innings.

Thompson started off shaky and let up three runs in five innings, but then settled down to pitch shutout ball for nine innings, allowing the Minutemen to scrap their way back to a tie in the eight.

"I don't know what the problem was," Thompson said after the game as an ice pack rested on his right shoulder, "the ball was sailing. It was nice after I started throwing strikes."

UMass came back from a 3-0 deficit with single runs in the sixth, seventh and eighth (Mark Litano tripled in the eighth, then scored the tying run on a Mark Brown sacrifice fly) and had a great opportunity to go ahead in the tenth.

Litano led off the tenth with a rocket three-bagger (his second) to right center. Crusader Larry Ewald chased it down and threw to the relay man as Litano rounded second. Coach Dick Bergquist, coaching third and expecting a routine relay throw, signalled his runner to slide. Litano went down but the cutoff man misplayed the throw from center. The ball rolled about ten feet away from the closest player, but it was too late for Litano to recover. He was stranded there as Mike McEvilly struck out, Mark Brown bunted foul on the third strike, and Dave Oleksak grounded into a fielder's choice.

Thompson walked the first batter he faced, then bobbled the next batter's bunt, putting men on first and second. The runners reached second and third on a fielder's choice, and the first Crusader score came on a passed ball by Thompson.

In the second, Thompson pitched out of a bases-loaded situation, but not without letting up a run. The third HC tally came on a double and a follow-up single.

Poor baserunning was a problem for UMass all day.

"Bitch!" You can say that again.

Gazelles stop Bridgewater, face UNH tomorrow at home

After a two-game scoring drought, the UMass women's lacrosse team poured it on to blank Bridgewater State College 14-0 on the upper NOPE field yesterday.

The 8-0 Minutewomen were led in the offense department by Whitney Thayer's six goals, while the defense never relented in taking away chances by Bridgewater. Passing, though somewhat wild and off-target in the early part of the first half, clicked together for UMass and helped to set up the Gazelle offense.

Senior Julie McHugh got UMass on the board with her first of two at 3:28 of the first half. Lynn Herbert scored the next two at 7:25 and 13:26. Thayer struck with a line shot at 14:25, with McHugh making it 6-0 30 seconds later. Thayer shoveled in her second, then made the score 8-0 when she jumped, caught the ball from Cari Nickerson, and shot it just above the goalie's head. That goal, at 22:52, finished the halftime scoring.

Julie Hall popped in her first of a pair at 2:19 of the second half. Thayer found daylight about nine minutes later with a shovel past the goalie's right side. Hall added to the shutout at 14:32, with Thayer scoring her final goal of the day at 16:02. Cari Nickerson, who had four assists in the game, took a pass from Patti Bossio to fire in the Gazelles' 13th goal at 17:57. Herbert concluded the barrage with the help of a pass from Thayer, scoring with 1:40 left on the clock.

"The defense did a good job," coach Pam Hixon said, "and it was good to see the team score again. After the game against Rhode Island (in which the Gazelles were held to two goals by Nickerson and one by Jean Hackett), it took a little while for us to warm up on the passing. Once we got going, we did a good job. We'll need to do the same thing against New Hampsire on Saturday. It's going to be a tough game."

The junior varsity followed with a 13-9 victory over the Bridgewater JVs. Betsy Mazeral led the UMass effort with five goals, followed by Linda Thayer with three.

The last home game of the season will be against the Wildcats of the University of New Hampshire. In the latest New England poll, UMass is ranked first, while UNH is in the number four spot. Last year, UMass and UNH met three times, with UMass taking all three (9-2 in the regular season, 4-3 OT in the Regionals, and 5-4 OT in the Nationals). Game time is 1:00 p.m.

False transcripts probed

The Hampshire-Franklin District Attorney's Office announced Friday that it had uncovered a scheme of falsifying student transcripts at UMass.

D.A. Thomas Simons, in a prepared statement, said that, "based on the evidence available at this time, it appears that a scheme was uncovered at its inception, was confined to a small group of people and involved a limited number of transcripts."

The statement did not specify when the investigation is expected to be completed nor when charges would be brought.

Simons said the investigation was based on information given to the University's police department by people working within the Records Office in the Whitmore Administration Building.

In November of 1978, during the district attorney race, white collar crime in the area had been a campaign issue.

'It appears that a scheme was uncovered at its inception' — Simons

Neither Gerald T. O'Neil, UMass public safety director, nor Dean of Students William F. Field would comment on the investigation.

Simons, a Montague native, said a combined investigation by his office, the University police, the U.S. district attorney's office and U.S. postal inspectors remains "ongoing."

The information, which was released—unusually—at 4:30 p.m. Friday, apparently took some University officials by surprise.

Any other information concerning the investigation was unavailable. Field said yesterday that he will "usually talk" about anything but that he could make no comment.

Secretary of State Vance to resign

WASHINGTON (AP) — Secretary of State Cyrus R. Vance, the only top adviser to President Carter to disagree with the rescue operation in Iran, is resigning, administration officials told The Associated Press last night.

Vance's resignation, which is considered imminent, is certain to add to President Carter's problems following the collapse of the mission in a remote desert in Iran.

"They had a good relationship, but both the president and the secretary concluded it was impossible for him to function as secretary of state," said a

Profs see few policy shifts

The imminent resignation of Secretary of State Cyrus Vance probably won't cause dramatic shifts in American foreign policy, although it could change the way foreign leaders view the Carter administration, UMass Political Science professor said last night.

"Vance has been seen by many of our allies as a pillar in the Carter administration," said Eric Einhorn, who teaches classes in World Politics. "I think Vance thinks he's been undercut by Brzezinski. Vance was responsible for getting the allies to back economic sanctions against Iran. He carried the message." Einhorn said the sanctions "have a greater cost" for Europeans than for Americans, and the failed rescue attempt could jeopardize their support for the United States.

UMass Prof. Luther Allen, who has taught American Foreign policy since 1953, said "I was hoping someone would have the courage to resign. It's Brzezinski that should be out though."

Einhorn said Vance's disagreements with the president's national security advisor were known throughout the administration.

Prof. Kenneth Dolbeare, who teaches American Political Thought, said "I don't think it will make a difference. Brzeznski is probably in charge anyway."

Allen criticized Carter's decision to rescue the hostages, and said "Foreign policy needs results, it doesn't do any good to say your intentions were good." He said the aborted rescue attempt showed "ineptitude" not strength.

Weekend nuke protest

Thousands rally in DC

By ABBE BJORKLUND

WASHINGTON — The cold, rainy weather here Saturday did not discourage 60,000 to 80,000 people from participating in a march and rally for a "Non-Nuclear Future."

The participants were enthusastic, even though they were wet and cold and some needed medical aid for hypothermia.

The event began at the Capitol area starting with a speech by Dr. Helen Caldicott on nuclear weapons escalation, and some dancing music from Pete Seeger. After the music, the demonstrators began a slow march from the Capitol Building down Constitution Avenue to the Washington Monument, chanting and waving signs.

The anger and determination of the participants was evident in some of their chants: "We're fired up, we won't take no more," "One, two three, four, we don't want to go to war, five, six, seven, eight, we refuse to radiate," and "To hell with corporate proftis, safe energy now."

There were a variety of groups involved, among them labor and student groups.

Some of the banners and signs read: "I am 50-years-old today...I hope my five grandchildren will live that long," "No Nukes!," "Did anyone ask you if you want nuclear power?," and "Democracy in America is dying."

The student contingent, composed of hundreds from around the country, marched together under a Student Coalition Against Nukes Nationwide banner. Most of the approximately 150 students from UMass—Amherst

Raitt sings against nukes

WASHINGTON — Bonnie Raitt, who came here Saturday to sing, looked just as she does on her latest album and was open and confident fielding questions from reporters.

First talking about Musicians United for Safe Energy, whom she came here to represent, Raitt said MUSE has raised more than $500,000 for grassroots anti-nuke organizations. A MUSE album, released last fall, has sold 500,000 copies in this country, she said, and 130,000 copies overseas.

Raitt's history n the anti-nuke movement began with her Quaker upbringing: Her parents were active in the nuclear disarment movement. Origianlly opposed to the Vietnam War, Raitt has continued her activism with MUSE, which she calls, "usually hedonistic." She said, "It's about time musicians used their tremedous resources to fundraise for certain causes."

SCANN holds DC meeting

WASHINGTON—Yesterday, about 100 anti-nuclear activists from around the nation met for a "continental" conference of the Student Coalition Against Nukes Nationwide.

Most of the conferees including 20 UMass students, had marched and rallied against nuclear power here Saturday.

The conference emphasized nuclear power, nuclear war and draft registration.

Conferees conceeded that to build a broad-based anti-nuclear movement, a system must be organized within a system, whether by registering people to vote or by direct action—such as civil disobedience.

Regional reports—from Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Washington, D.C., Chicago and other states—kicked off the conference.

After the regional reports, the conferees heard from two speakers, Michui Kaku, a nuclear physist, and Daniel Sheehan, chief legal counsel in the Karen Silkwood case. Workshops followed the speakers.

The general consensus reached at the conference was a committment to enthusiasm and energy for the anti-nuclear issue and for a stronger alliance between SCANN chapters around the country.

Colombian guerillas granted asylum in Cuba

By TOM WELLS
Associated Press Writer

BOGOTA, Colombia (AP) — Guerrillas ended their 61-day occupation of the Dominican Republic Embassy yesterday, flying aboard a Cuban jetliner to Havana. All 16 of their diplomatic hostages, including U.S. Ambassador Diego Asencio, were reported freed.

The ambassadors from Venezuela, the Dominican Republic, Israel and Egypt were released just before the Soviet-built Ilyushin jet took off at 8:20 a.m., local time, about 1¼ hours after the guerrillas left the embassy with their hostages in two Red Cross buses.

The others, including Asencio and the papal nuncio, were flown to Havana along with the guerrilla band, then set free, a State Department official in Washington said. Shortly after the siege began, Cuban President Fidel Castro offered the guerrillas political asylum in Cuba.

From Havana, Asencio was flown on a charter plane to Homestead Air Force Base in southern Florida where he was to be met by his wife. The other diplomats were to return to Bogota or head home from Havana.

The plane landed in Havana at 11:50 a.m. local time, 3½ hours after if departed.

According to a Colombian Foreign Ministry official, other hostage diplomats aboard the flight to Havana besides Asencio were: the ambassadors of Mexico, Brazil, Switzerland, Haiti, Guatemala, the papal nuncio, the charges d'affaires of Paraguay and Bolivia and the consuls of Peru, Venezuela, and Guatemala.

Also on board was the Cuban ambassador to Colombia, relief agency officials, and officials from international organizations that helped mediate an end to the dispute. Prensa Latina, the official Cuban news agency, issued the same list.

Two Colombians, originally taken hostage but who reportedly later stayed in the embassy by choice, were released in Bogota.

Diogenes Mallol, the Dominican ambassador, who was one of the four diplomats set free in Colombia, praised Colombia's President Julio Cesar Turbay Ayala for managing "this problem with prudence and calm.

Details of the settlement were not immediately known, but the guerrillas left the country without gaining the release of jailed comrades, as they had originally demanded. They had also originally demanded a ransom of $50 million and worldwide publication of their manifesto, neither of which they got.

They were reported, however, to have won international guarantees governing the conduct of political trials and other assurances their rights would be protected.

There also was a report, uncontirmed, that a $2.5 million ransom would be paid.

The Colombian government apparently reached agreement Saturday with the 15 to 20 guerrillas, who took the building over during a diplomatic reception Feb. 27.

During the course of the siege, the guerrillas, members of a group calling itself M-19, released 38 of the 57 persons originally taken captive. A 39th, the Uruguayan ambassador, escaped. The guerrillas take their name from the April 19, 1970 presidential elections they claim were rigged.

Cuban refugee ships reportedly sinking

By STEVE WILSON
Associated Press

KEY WEST, Fla. (AP) — Cuban and U.S. Coast Guard rescue vessels searched the stormy waters of the Florida Straits on Sunday after receiving reports that two "Freedom Flotilla" boats — one carrying 200 refugees — were sinking.

The two boats were bound for Florida in turbulent seas and strong, gusty winds Saturday when the first distress calls came into the Coast Guard. One of the boats reported it had 200 persons aboard and the other said it had 10 to 15.

The distress calls also were among dozens received by Coast Guard officials and ham radio operators.

One ham radio operator reported that a Soviet freighter sank two small boats, but the Coast Guard said it could not confirm the report. It could not be learned how many people were supposed to have been aboard the boats or when or where the collisions occurred.

Lt. Roland Isnor of the Coast Guard's Key West station said a ham radio operator reported "that a Russian freighter had run down two vessels and that they sank."

A Coast Guard duty officer, who asked not to be identified, said there was no other evidence of a collision or intentional ramming.

The boats reported to be sinking were reported to be in trouble off Cuba's northern coast. A small vessel was later found in the area, capsized and deserted, and the Coast Guard said it may have been one of the two that reported they were in distress.

Five Coast Guard cutters were in the area Sunday and four others were steaming toward it.

The Coast Guard said distress calls were received from dozens of other small craft as inexperienced skippers ran into trouble in the 90-mile crossing.

"It's bad for small boats," said Petty Officer Mike Kelley.

Three boats carrying 523 people arrived in Key West overnight, bringing the total number of Cuban refugees who have arrived in Florida since April 20 to about 3,000.

About 1,500 boats were reported waiting to take on refugees at the Port of Mariel in Cuba and 600 were in Key West preparing to leave for Cuba.

The boatlift began after Cuban President Fidel Castro said those wanting to leave Cuba could do so. Some of those who left were among the more than 10,000 people who crowded into the Peruvian Embassy in Havana earlier in the month, seeking to emigrate.

The capsized boat was a 24- foot craft found Sunday morning about 25 miles north of Mariel by the Coast Guard cutter Diligence.

It was spotted after the smaller of the two vessels reported in distress radioed it was sinking 25 miles north of Havana, said Coast Guard spokesman Greg Robinson in Miami.

"There was one life jacket in the water and no people," Kelley said. "It's difficult to say whether they drowned or not. We're hoping that another boat picked them up."

Kennedy travels to Mexico

By DONALD M. ROTHBERG
AP Political Writer

DETROIT (AP) — Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, bolstered by election victories over President Carter in two industrial states, headed yesterday for a visit to Mexico that may yield new political dividends for Kennedy's presidential campaign.

The reason: the next big Carter-Kennedy primary test is next Saturday in Texas, where Kennedy enjoys strong support in the large Mexican-American community. That backing could be strengthened by Kennedy's meeting Monday with Mexican President Jose Lopez Portillo.

The Iran situation, too, could affect the outcome, but Carter was favored to win a majority of the 152 delegate votes at stake in Texas.

Ronald Reagan picked up 12 more delegates this weekend in congressional district caucuses in Missouri and Minnesota, lengthening his already wide margin over George Bush for the Republican presidential nomination.

Kennedy won last week in Pennsylvania and Michigan by the narrowest of margins and didn't make much of a dent in Carter's wide lead in their contest for the 1,666 delegate votes needed for nomination at the Democratic National Convention in August.

The latest total compiled by The Associated Press gave Carter 1,109 nominating votes and Kennedy 639.

The balloting in Missouri and Minnesota left Reagan with 429 delegates compared with Bush's 96. A total of 998 delegate votes is needed for the GOP nomination.

After the results of Democratic caucuses in Michigan were tallied Saturday, showing Kennedy gaining 71 delegates to Carter's 70, spokesmen for both campaigns expressed satisfaction.

Tim Kraft, a top Carter political strategist, called the outcome "a good day's work." He noted that Kennedy had to settle for a slim victory and observed, "We just keep piling up those delegates."

"We are very pleased with the results, especially under the circumstances," said Stephen Smith, Kennedy's brother-inlaw and campaign manager.

The circumstance that had most worried the Kennedy camp was the ill-fated attempt to rescue the American hostages in Iran, and whether it would prompt a surge of support for the president.

Notes from the campaign trail

There was no clear indication, from the Michigan results or from random interviews at caucuses, how the Iran situation might have affected the vote.

But Kennedy appeared to have benefited from widespread discontent in the state over his handling of the economy. Michigan has been particularly hard hit by plum-meting sales and employee layoffs in the automobile industry.

Douglas Fraser, president of the United Auto Workers union and a key Kennedy ally, said he thought Carter gained from public reaction to the rescue attempt.

Earlier in the week, Kennedy narrowly defeated Carter in the Pennsylvania primary and came away with 93 delegates, compared with 92 for the president.

Soviet missles in Afghanistan

NEW DELHI, India (AP) — The Soviet Union has introduced ballistic missiles into Afghanistan that are believed to carry nuclear warheads and have sufficient range to control entry into the Persian Gulf, Indian news reports said Sunday.

There was no official confirmation of the reports.

The Press Trust of India said a new Soviet missile capability in Afghanistan is seen as "a counterweight to the American presence in Diego Garcia," the U.S. base in the Indian Ocean.

PTI correspondent H.N. Kaul quoted unidentified "highly placed sources" as saying the "Soviets have equipped themselves with medium-range ballistic missiles in Afghanistan."

"It is believed that these carry nuclear as well as high explosive warheads," wrote Kaul.

However, a Western diplomat following Afghan developments in New Delhi said he had not heard of nuclear warheads or ballistic missiles in the landlocked country.

Soviet surface-to-surface tactical missiles, with a 25-mile range, earlier had been reported in Afghanistan. Kaul, who returned here last Friday after spending several weeks in Kabul, said they can be seen in the Afghan capital.

An Indian news magazine, India Today, meanwhile, quoted diplomatic sources in Kabul as saying "the Soviets have brought in intercontinental missiles and nuclear warheads."

The diplomats were not identified by nationality. But the magazine said the "Indian Embassy is the best informed" in Kabul.

Gethers paroled, may return to UMass

By JAMES F. MAHONEY
Collegian Staff

UMass student Craeman Gethers, who has served five years of an armed robbery conviction was paroled last Thursday by the Massachusetts Parole Board, and will be eligible to return to the University in good academic standing, Dean of Students William F. Field said yesterday.

Gethers, who along with Robert Earl Brown, was convicted in 1974 of armed robbery of the route 9 MacDonalds restaurant in Hadley, never lost his status as a student at UMass and the University has never taken any disciplinary action against him Field said.

Field said he has encouraged Gethers to return to the University to continue his education. He said he thought Gethers was taking courses through the UMass/Boston University Without Walls program while he was in prison.

Gethers, who was serving an eight to twelve year sentence, gained parole after a 45-minute meeting with the parole board last Thursday. Field, along with State Rep. James Collins, D-Amherst, supported Gether's parole. Field sent a letter to the board in support of Gether's parole. He will be released from a detention center in Shirley on May 26.

The trials of both men were well publicized, with their first trial ending in a mis-trial. Gethers dismissed his original lawyer because he claimed he had advised him to perjure himself. He also said the counsel did not seek evidence or witnesses that would have proved grounds for an acquittal.

Gethers attempted to gain a retrial, but his request was rejected in 1978.

Brown, also a UMass student who had received a much shorter sentence was paroled in 1977, after serving two years.

Poet speaks of racism, sexism

By DEBBIE WALLACE
Collegian Staff

Out of her conciousness of women's oppression, battery, harassment, rape and misogyny, Poet and Author Adrienne Rich, now writes and works toward making women aware of the racism within the women's movement.

Rich said she believes that "racism and misogyny are absolutely linked" and "as women we are not only oppressed by men but we "oppress each other."

She spoke in beautiful, prosaic phrases Thursday night, to 650 Five College men and women in a crowded Johnson Chapel at Amherst College. Although her speech was eloquent, she passionately urged people to work toward recognizing and ending, "routine and random hostility which exists against women of color and white women." She said this is a fact of life in this valley and throughout the country.

Rich gave numerous examples of hatred of white women and women of color, which she said "easily mystified and covered over." She cited such incidents as "sexual harassment in a co-ed dorm, ill-lit campus parking lots, the problems for women at WESCO, several black women hitchhiking who are raped and killed, and the mutilation of black women in Boston that is never well investigated."

Rich said, anti-feminism and racism have deep roots. "I believe women of every color are starting to address both of these abuses."

Rich pointed to the portraits on the walls of the Chapel, and said these fathers of Amherst College depict one class, one gender, and almost one race with the exception of one Asian man. She said not a single member looks "violence prone" or "hooked on the use of force, they do not need. The use of force always seems to come from elsewhere, this is the meaning of institutional abuse."

She said in the ten commandments "they neglected to include 'though shall not rape.'" She said the natural order of things includes the "pimps, pornographers, the criminal justice system, as well as a women who has been beaten for years without police intervention and ultimately kills her husband - she is not rational - she is shrill, strident, and hysterical."

Rich facilitated a conciousness-raising workshop Friday for white women "to explore and deal with their racism in order to channel their energy into thinking and communicating within the context of the whole society."

While writing her book, Of Women Born (1976), she explored the joy and pain, the myth and the reality of motherhood. Rich said she was writing the chapter on mothers and daughters when suddenly she remembered she had a black women take care of her until the age of four. "A black woman took more actual care of me than my own mother, bathing, feeding. I never examined the pain I felt when she ceased to take care of me," Rich said. She added, "as a white child growing up in this overtly racist society, I quickly learned the 'correct ways' of viewing black people."

She said she wrote articles during the 1960's that came out of her teaching of Puerto Rican and minority education. But, when "I got mail about that chapter in my book from women who felt I had not really dealt with racism, I began this work."

About sixty white women and a black woman attended the workshop voicing a variety of opinions and means in which to identify racism and see "black and Third World feminists within the political and social contexts in which they struggle." Margo Smith, a Domestic Violence teaching assistant for the Massachusetts Coalition Battered Women's project, said "Each group has to look at its own position in the community and not rush in and hurt them by including a few token women of color without first dealing with their racism."

As a foolow-up to the workshop, a Racism Awareness Action Training workshop for whites, conducted by whites, was held yesterday and today at Amherst College.

Rich said women have to look at the most banal, everyday things that happen and ask how it has to do with the oppression of white women and women of color. Rich said the task is not only to examine the old stereotypes of the balck, Asian, Native American, Hispanic and white woman—but to have something to put in its place."

She stressed the importance of reading black and Third World women's literature as well as doing internal work. "It can't be carried out immediately. It's an extremely painfull process to see the racism in literature and in ourselves but it is important not to read and view society from our white centered perspective," Rich said.

Concert tickets at CC

Student tickets for this year's Spring Concert are being distributed today and tomorrow outdoors on the library side of the 3rd floor of the Campus center.

The tickets can be picked up at the "pillbox" on the south side of the outdoor level of the building. The tickets are free to all UMass undergraduate students and current student identification must be shown to pick them up.

Guest tickets for the show are also being sold for $15 at the Fine Arts Center Box Office. Any UMass student, employee and Five College student can purchase up to four tickets.

Young speaks tonight

Andrew Young, former U.S. Ambassador to the United Nations, will speak on "America's foreign policy" tonight at the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall.

Tickets for the event, sponsored by the Distinguished Visitors program, are on sale at the TIX box office in the Student Union Lobby at $2 for students and $3 for the general public. Young is scheduled to appear at 8 p.m.

New group forms

"Caring...life's magic." With these words in mind, a charter was formed this past weekend establishing a Circle K at UMass, a service organization with nearly 700 clubs throughout the United States and Canada.

With a current membership of over thirty members, Mike Barricelli, newly inducted president said Circle K will benefit the UMass community.

"We plan on sponsoring a dance marathon to benefit Multiple Sclerosis. We are involved with the upcoming spring concert, and the Road Race to benefit Father Bruce Ritter. In the future we will service the campus in other ways," he said.

There are thirty districts across the country in the Circle K organizations. Circle K at UMass became the seventeenth club in their district. Each Circle K is sponsored by a Kiwanis Club, although they are self-governing and self-financing. The UMass Circle K is sponsored by the Amherst Kiwanis.

At charter night Amherst Kiwanis President Bruce Barker addressed an audience of thirty. "I would like to congratulate the newly inducted officers. Amherst is proud to be your sponsor. We hope your years here will be rewarding ones," he said.

'Pinball wizards' spend thousands each year

By KEN ROSS
Special to the Collegian

More than $750 is spent 25 cents at a time at pinball machines and electronic games every day of the school year at UMass.

The contract for the machines belongs to Trico Vendors of Easthampton who were awarded a three-year contract through an open bidding process. The contract grants 60 percent of the $165,000 to $250,000 spent yearly at the machines to the Campus Center.

Larry Ruth of the Board of Governors said that profits this year will approach $150,000, which is $50,000 more than last year. Some of the money is used to provide newer machines, which remain playable for one to two years, he said.

According to Bill Harris, Director of the Campus Center, money taken from the machines helps pay the salaries of janitors, Campus Center administration and general maintenance.

Trico maintains the machines and trains and supplies at least one full-time worker for the Campus Center to repair machines. In addition, a part-time worker is usually available when recieving on-the-job training. One repairman said the machines need constant maintenance because of "use and abuse."

The games' popularity is obvious: but who plays, and why?

Bill Farquehson, a UMass undergraduate student said he spends $5 to $7 a week on pinball to take his mind off school. Brian Barret, another undergraduate, said he plays to take out aggressions from a day of classes. Archie Moe, another student, said he prefers the video games and will spend up to ten dollars at a time. Judy LaFleur, also a student, said she uses pinball "for medicinal purposes."

Radio station WZZZ on the air in Southwest

By SARAH HAMMANN
Collegian Staff

WZZZ, a student-run, non-profit radio station cleared the air and broadcast to its Southwest Residential Area audience for the first time a week ago.

"I started the radio station as a dorm R.A. project for strictly JQA residents," General Manger Ed Duggan said. "The idea and popularity of the station grew quickly, and both the Southwest Assembly and Southwest Budget Committee pledged financial support the operation and management of the station."

Staffed currently by four core organizers and 50 Disc Jockeys, the station has launched its free-format programs after close to two years of budget planning, equiptment purchasing, and crew soliciting.

Since the station does not yet have a repertoire of albums and tapes, D.J.s play recordings from privately owned collections.

"We are hoping the station will be a unifying factor for Southwest," Duggan said.

"The Black Massachusetts Community Project currently has two special programs, and we hope to develop unique talk programs.

Why WZZZ? "It was the most neutral, unprejudiced name we could think of," Duggan answered.

Other features include a Public Service Announcement Calendar, a nightly 'Campus Lowdown' spot, and such commercial station-patterned specials as request lines and a logo contest, for the near future.

91.7 FM, nicknamed a "rock 'n roll heaven," is broadcasting under the FCC regulation of .1 watts, and can be heard weekdays between noon and three a.m. and weekends between noon and six a.m.

'Que Tal' move disputed

By MARC FAGELSON
Collegian Staff

The controversy surrounding WFCR General Manager Robert Goldfarb still remains as new protests concerning the reinstatement of "Que tal, Amigos?" and the rejection of a contemporary classical music program were made by listeners at a meeting last week.

The Spanish language show was reinstated after protestors occupied the office of UMass Chancellor Henry Koffler to protest the shortening of the show's hours. A compromise was reached between Goldfarb, the protestors and the Western Massachusetts Broadcasting Council, and the show was granted its original prime time hours instead of three broadcasting days.

The show was shortened initially by Goldfarb in response to letters and phone calls from listeners who felt the show should not be aired weeknights during prime time.

At a meeting last week before the Western Massachusetts Broadcasting Council, two listeners said they felt 'disinfranchised" because they and other listeners were not consulted when Goldfarb reacted to the Hispanic protests by reinstating the show to its former time slot.

"Why did a survey of listeners and our support for program changes become null and void when the Coalition for Public Involvement in Public Radio challenged them?" asked one of the listeners.

To alleviate the controversy, an advisory committee on Spanish language programming will meet weekly and submit advice to Goldfarb by May 10, council member Woodward Wickham said. The emphasis in the committee's function will be to find a balance in programming, and to appeal to their listening public.

Goldfarb was charged by Michael Richards and Joseph Baltar, who produced the classical show "New Directions" for WMUA and the Amherst and Mt. Holyoke stations, with "not meeting (his) obligations to the community" because shows produced by local musicians were rejected.

Goldfarb said the shows were rejected because he felt the show's quality was not suitable for airplay.

"The primary obstacle is the quality, both editorial and technical, not the fact that it deals with sexism or racism," Goldfarb said.

Secretary Vance resigning post

senior administration official, who refused to be identified.

Vance was the only member of the National Security Council who opposed the operation, the official said. But afterward, he supported the administration in explaining the operation to foreign governments.

Vance's disagreement over the military venture was only one of a series of setbacks for the soft-spoken former Wall Street lawyer, whose approach to foreign policy was one of conciliation, rather than confrontation.

Again and again, he ended up on the short end of power struggles with Zbigniew Brzezinski, the determined anti-Soviet national security adviser who played a prominent role in drawing the United States away from detente with the Russians.

There was no immediate indication of who would take Vance's place. He had said in the past he would be leaving at the end of the four-year presidential term, even if Carter is re-elected, and Warren M. Christopher, the deputy secretary of state, has been considered a leading prospect to succeed him.

A theory has persisted from the start that Brzezinski, like Kissinger, would like to move from the national security adviser's job to secretary of state. But last month, Brezezinski told a women's Democratic group that his choice for a new secretary was Christopher, a slight Los Angeles lawyer who served in the Justice Department during the Johnson administration.

Christopher recently has taken on a number of travel missions that normally would have been Vance's, including efforts to persuade European leaders to support Carter's economic sanctions against Iran and against the Soviet Union for the Soviets' intervention in Afghanistan.

Vance, 63, is a veteran of the Democratic foreign policy establishment whose international views underwent a major shift during the Vietnam war. A former deputy defense secretary, he became a quiet advocate of conciliation and a low-keyed approach to world problems.

One of his principal interests, a transition to black rule in Rhodesia, was accomplished largely through the offices of the British government. But in arms control and human rights, Vance saw once-favored Carter policies take a back seat to growing confrontation with the Soviet Union.

While Brzezinski, Defense Secretary Harold Brown and other key advisers to Carter were prominent in the aftermath of the rescue attempt, there was no sign of Vance, even though he quietly worked pre-dawn hours at the State Department directing notification to foreign governments and consultations with key members of Congress.

In dealing with foreign goverments, Vance seems to enjoy a good reputation. His avoidance of bombast was appreciated in foreign capitols. From the start, he never attracted the attention of his celebrated predecessor, Henry A. Kissinger, who had a gift for publicity. Vance did not seem to mind and even brushed off frequent reports of differences with Brzezinski who is in more of the Kissinger mold.

Earlier this spring, Vance stepped forward to accept responsibility for a politically embarrassing U.N. vote by the United States favoring condemnation of Israel's settlements policy.

While Carter disavowed the U.S. vote, Vance was left appearing to have not conveyed Carter's intentions accurately to Donald McHenry, the U.S. ambassador to the United Nations.

Europeans support US effort to free hostages

By ARTHUR L. GAVSHON
AP Diplomatic Correspondent

LUXEMBOURG (AP) — Leaders of the nine-nation European Common Market, meeting here in the aftermath of the failed American rescue mission, rallied behind efforts to free the 50 U.S. hostages in Iran.

French President Valery Giscard d'Estaing, often critical of American policies and leadership, told reporters: "France has decided to pursue with the European community its efforts in solidarity with the United States to achieve freedom for the hostages held in violation of human and international rights."

Aides to Chancellor Helmut Schmidt released the text of a "Dear Jimmy" letter he sent to President Carter, saying: "You can be assured that the government of the Federal Republic of Germany is determined to continue at the side of the United States of America to help find a solution to the hostage problem."

Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher of Britain also reportedly sent a supportive message to the president, and a British spokesman told reporters:

"There is no disposition to criticize President Carter for the operation. It renders more necessary our (community) collective economic and diplomatic measures. There is no change in our position. We stand by the agreement that was made."

He was referring to the group's announced intention to impose tougher sanctions against Iran if there is not "decisive progress" toward release of the hostages by May 17. Japan and other nations are likely to go along with any Common Market move.

Other issues — the Soviet intervention into Afghanistan and a dispute over the size of the British contribution to the Common Market budget — were to have been the main items of business during the two-day meeting.

Inhuman amnesia

"The Marines who worked the body detail were overloaded and rushed and became snappish, ripping packs off corpses angrily, cutting gear away with bayonets, heaving bodies into the green bags. One of the dead Marines had done stiff and they had trouble getting him to fit. "Damn," one of them said, "this fucker had big feet. Didn't this fucker have big feet," as he finally forced the legs inside...

"It was at this point that I began to recognize almost every casualty, remember conversations we'd had days or even hours earlier, and that's when I left (Hue), riding a medevac with a lieutenant who was covered with blood-soaked bandages. He'd been hit in both legs, both arms, the chest and head, his eyes and ears were full of caked blood, and he asked a photographer in the chopper to get a picture of him like this to send to his wife."

Michael Herr
Dispatches

Imagine yourself, a son, brother, husband or friend, as a man in a modern war, not that modern wars are so different from old wars like WWII; the weapons are different but the injuries are similar, and pain never changes.

One thing that could be said to distinguish old wars from modern ones, like our most recent in Vietnam ten years ago, is the difference in the character of the threat perceived, to which war was the response.

The soldier in Europe believed he was saving his country, family and friends from Hitler's Third Riech. He knew he would remain there until either he was killed or his country won the war. That was the deal. The soldier in Vietnam was told of the threat of Communist world dominance, of "saving" the Vietnamese, of saving his country. But it didn't look that way to him as he tried avoiding the glares of hatred shown him by the poeple he though he was defending—the Vietnamese whose faces haunted him in his sleep.

But these reasons didn't really interest him, because the American soldier was in Vietnam mostly to escape his poverty at home, and to kill people, for somebody. Ten years after America's undignified retreat from Vietnam we have more information than we did at the time about why we—our brothers, sons, husbands and friends—had died or been maimed, had killed or maimed others: The reasons are still unclear, but none of them had anything to do with Communist world domination, "saving" the Vietnamese or protecting America from foreign invasion. Simply and devastatingly, we were lied to.

For those who were lost to Vietnam we are indebted to honor their suffering and death, or we may also lose what they have taught us: to wonder why our lives are taken as theirs have been, to ask each other and ourselves, "What are our options? Is this, the necessity or war, the truth?"

New wave ignored

To the Editor:

Regarding the choices for the Spring Concert: While I personally am displeased with the choices of The Allman Brothers, Bonnie Raitt, NRBQ, and as yet an undisclosed Third World band, I would like to know just how these "bands" were picked. This makes two years in a row in which the "main act" is a totally outdated collection of "musicians." There is a representative from everything except the most recent and increasingly popular trend of music deemed new wave. It is obvious that this type of music is in demand. One only need look at the top 100 lp's in Billboard magazine, or listen to WMUA or WSYL, two campus radio stations. Better yet, one could frequent the blue Wall on Tuesdays or on the weekends, when more and more new wave bands are being hired by those who (I believe) are responsible for the Spring Concert Picks: the UPC.

Maybe my perception of the popularity of new wave music is exaggerated, but I think not. What I do know is that the students who partially pay for the Spring Concert should have a greater say in who is solicited to play.

So my final suggestion is that this be done through some kind of poll, possible taken through the Collegian, whereby an accurate representation will be presented at one of the biggest events of the school year.

No Saturday classes!

To the Editor:

I feel that finals, tests, and classes scheduled on Saturday is an atrocity. The reason being that every Saturday is the Jewish Sabbath. On this day Jews are not allowed to carry, write, etc. (There are 39 prohibitions in all.) By scheduling school days on Saturday, the school is also violating the first amendment: freedom of religion, speech, etc.

As I see it, the rulemakers have two options: 1) Make a by-law that states that no finals, tests, or classes are scheduled Saturday; or 2) Make Sunday a schoolday. I doubt the church or the Christian people in general would allow this. I request that this oversight be corrected by next semester, if not sooner.

Fred Nebel

Hey, guys, you need glasses!

To the Editor:

I'd like to express my disappointment and pity for those of us whose foresight extends only so far as our television sets allow. The editorial written by the two gentlemen from Central—in addition to its overindulgence of the word, "Bullshit"—was, in areas, outright wrong.

First, I wish that Mr. Giblin and Mr. Steele would take a good hard look at the empirical connection between registration and war in this country's history. Every time we've had registration, we've had a draft, and then a war. Why? Because we live in a stockpile economy. 51 cents of every tax dollar is invested in the military, all with the supposed intent of not using it. However, due to the laws of supply and demand, the 'producers,' out of their desire to stay in business, create a demand—war. (Incidentally, if you two would look at a newspaper now and again, you'd both realize that at present most of the world is at war.

Second, look at the Persian Gulf and then tell me that Exxon, Mobil, and all of the others wouldn't give their firstborn (or yours, for that matter) for its ownership. In the same vein, do you think, for one minute, that those oil fields would survive a war—or that we would survive to use them?

It really upsets me to see a country that is so bent on overt individuality turn into a collective of hysterical war fanatics—and all at the request of the energy monopolies. To me, that puts Pavlov's dogs to shame.

In short, I'd hate to see the U.S. go completely down the chute for the sake of a few sick minds (or wallets). I, for one, refuse to go over and kill, or be killed, over a barrel of oil or to further the economy. It's not that I'm saying patriotism is blind, I'm not. What I am saying is that patriotism, at least in this case, desperately needs a pair of glasses.

Oh, by the way, my compliments as to the use of the phrase, "Love it, or leave it." It was first coined by a great American—Spiro Agnew.

'Legacy' — a moving poem

By DAVID AMBOS
Collegian Staff

"Lucky Strikes Legacy", a "choreopoem" by Freida Jones, is largely a memorial tribute to those talented young Afro-American musicians who adverse living conditions and artistically-linked self-destructive tendencies sent to early graves; drowned in booze, and buried in boxes sealed by several thousand of the coffin nails of the title. Like the musicians elegized in the play, the Third World Series production of it seemed doomed from the start, but was nevertheless determined to fight the good fight and convey its urgent, soul-felt message before winking out. By dint of perseverance, aided by considerable verve, nerve and tenacity in the face of considerable difficulties, it largely succeeded. The production was worthwhile both for the music of Ms. Jones poetry, and for the dauntless playing of the cast.

Probably the greatest problems this production contended with were the deficiencies of Ms. Jones "choreopoem"; which, whatever it is, is not a play. The plot is sparse, the characterizations weak, interplay lacking, and such niceties as dramatic conflict and buildups almost nonexistent. Too often the performance resembled a poetry reading. Ms. Jones lyrical lines contained good deal of substance and beauty, but asking the actors to dramatize them using the undeveloped, infant characters she provides is like asking someone to play "Stompin' at the Savoy" on a toy saxophone. Like Charlie Brown's pal Schroeder, facing a smiliar situation, director Laura Patricia Harrington and cast had to improvise, innovate, and adapt to make the piece work as a dramatic presentation; which they managed to do with only intermittent success. Nevertheless, there was lots of fine poetry, and plenty of good, ad-lib acting.

'Lucky Strikes Legacy" traces the history of contemporary Afro-American music, from the be-bop fifties to the present and beyond. Jones' poetry works best in the first act, as she conjures the spirit of a dead Harlem out of her childhood memories. As she takes backwards glances, flat visual recollections, and passed them through the prism of poetic reminiscence, they bloom into the full spectrum of the senses. The taste, smell, texture and color of New York in teh 1950's are all beautifully evoked by her poetry. Only the characters remain one-dimensional ghosts.

The second act was perhaps the most successful of the show's three segments. The opening scene recalls the birth of disco with fond snickers, and the rest of the act went on to condemn the mindless, programmed, tail-thumping music and the "self"-obsessed disco philosophy. It parodies the superficial, satin and silkience mutations that developed after the Disco Explosion, when the ego-bomb went off. The powerful close of the act is both a tribute to Jimi Hendrix, and other intense, defiant musicians who lived hard and died young, and a bitter jeremiad on the contemporary devaluation of cultural currency.

Most plays come together in the final act, but that's where this piece fell apart; largely because of its over-reliance on the untiished character of Bilal, an angry young musical revolutionary who wants to spearhead a revival of serious jazz in the post-disco age. A promising character, whom Ms. Jones did not bring to full-term, Bilal remains in the fetal stage in Chris Johnson's stunted portrayal. The emotional group rendition of the show's last poem, "Reed," does something to pick up the pieces of the act. A metaphorical celebration of all music and musicians, it became a resonant, affecting coda to the whole performance.

Director Harrington deserves a lot of credit for bringing her group this far this fast (they had less than a month of rehearsal). Both she and the cast worked hard to overcome many obstacles; sometimes they had difficulty getting rehearsal space. Outstanding in the cast was Julie Hall as Aura, the narrator/author character of the piece, and Terence Lake, who does a very funny bit as the villainous "Wizard of Disco." Altogether, despite its flaws, this was an enjoyable production.

'Three Sisters' well done

By GARY EYNATIAN
Special to the Collegian

The Smith College Theatre Department's production of Anton Chekhov's "Three Sisters," which has been playing the past two weekends and will have its last performance May 16, is a fine portrayal of a sensitive, sometimes humorous story detailing the lives of three sisters living in a provincial town in 19th century Russia.

The full range of human emotions are expressed as we see the sisters struggle to escape the demands of family, friends and lovers in order to attain their dreams. These sisters, Olga, Masha and Irina, their brother Andrey, his wife Natalya, Masha's husband Kuygin and an ever present group of army officers, all explore such themes as happiness, marriage, work, beauty, manners, the past, present and future. For some of them these aspects of life are meaningful and for others they are meaningless. Vershinin, one of the officers philosophizes, "Happiness we do not possess, happiness doesn't exist; it's just something we long for."

The production's cast, composed of Five-College students, faculty and local actors is, overall, quite good. Some of the most illuminating moments in the performance owe to the outstanding acting by some of the supporting cast. Beth Koules as Olga, the eldest of the sisters, very accurately projects the moral strength of the character, despite the fact that Olga feels her youth and strength being "squeezed out day by day, drop by drop." Charlene Cassimire as Masha, the unhappily married middle sister, shows very well the character's frustration with the present through her angry and resentful actions. The youngest daughter Irina, played by Peggy Liu, must carry youth, hope, beauty and happiness throughout the play. This Miss Liu does, although some of her speeches, particularly her heartbroken fit in Act III, where she acted more angered than crushed, could be more convincing.

Chekhov's customary humor is abundant in the play despite the apparent unhappiness of the sisters.

Naval force increased

WASHINGTON (AP) — U.S. naval strength in the Indian Ocean area reached a record level Sunday with the arrival of the aircraft carrier Constellation and six escorting warships.

This brings to about 34 the number of American naval ships operating in the vast Indian Ocean-Arabian Sea-Persian Gulf area.

There were 31 ships in the area last month.

The Defense Department announced the arrival of the Constellation and said the the nuclear-powered aircraft carrier Eisenhower and two nuclearpropelled cruisers are due to enter the Indian Ocean on Tuesday.

The Constellation battle group and the Eisenhower force are due to relieve two aircaft carriers, the nuclear-powered Nimitz and the Coral Sea, which have been on station in the Arabian Sea-Gulf of Oman for months.

It will take several days for the Constellation and Eisenhower to reach their stations and replace the Nimitz and the Coral Sea, which means that for at least a brief period the United States will have four of its 13 aircaft carriers in the Indian Ocean area.

At last report, the Soviets had 27 ships in those same general waters, about five fewer than the peak Russian naval force there in late February.

marched under the banner. The students were a particularly local part of the march, using a bullhorn to project their chants through the crowd.

When the demonstrators got to the staging area at the monument, they spread out over the lawn for almost six hours of music and speakers. Dotted among the crowd were exhibits and vendors of food and anti-nuclear paraphenalia.

The rain continued throughout the rally.

The event was peaceful, with no disruptions, police said, although riot gear was seen. Of seven police officers interviewed, all seemed to think the rally was no different than any other in the last seven to eleven years. One said he was glad the rally was bringing revenue to the city's economy.

One officer was critical of socialist workers here. "It's not right," he said.

Their aim, the organizers said, was "to educate the grassroots citizenry of America and at the same time to deliver a message to the White House and Congress that time is running out."

The speakers and musicians reflected the organizers statements with their music and speeches.

The list of speakers included: Barry Commoner, noted author and Citizen's party presidential candidate and Hilda Mason, Washington city councilwomen.

for the May 4 Kent State dmonstration, the May 24 Seabrook N.H. rally, the July "Black Hills" gathering and a counter Democratic National convention.

The conference concluded with a cheer of "No Nukes" from all participants.

Correction

In the stories of Father Bruce Ritter in both the Thursday and Friday editions of the COllegian, the 1980 budget for Covenant House was reported as $5.6 billion. The actual budget is $5.6 million.

There will be a mandatory Collegian staff meeting Wednesday night at 6:30 in the Collegian office.

For more info see Steve Klein.

Commoner favors solar power

WASHINGTON — Barry Commoner spoke Saturday in favor of solar energy and conservation as alternatives to nuclear power.

His emphasis was anti-corporate: "I think the chief thing we must do is break the grip of the big corporations that govern our lives. After all, the reason why we have nuclear power is...so they can make bigger profits."

Commoner claimed, "68 power plants of the 72 in operation can be cut off immediately with no power loss."

He said he felt the U.S. is "guilty" in causing the situation in Iran, and criticized President Carter. "The way the U.S. has handled Iran shows the government is incompetent" and threatens world peace with nuclear war, he said.

He said: "No one will survive a nuclear war. Nuclear weapons are not a defense of anything."

Spring Concert '80 student tickets will be available on 4/22, 4/23, 4/24, 4/25, 4/28 4/29

Iranian judge says 29 died in rescue attempt

By The Associated Press

A leading Iranian judge said Sunday that at least 29 U.S. servicemen died in the failed attempt to rescue the American hostages. But the White House insisted only eight bodies were left behind in the Iranian desert.

Ayatollah Sadegh Khalkhali displayed maps, machine guns and the bodies of eight servicemen at the U.S. Embassy in Tehran. He said the remains of nine had been recovered and at least 20 more commandos died, "but their bodies are powder now."

Broadcasts by Tehran Radio claimed nine Americans were killed.

There was no explanation for the display of only eight of the bodies.

While the bodies, in sheets and plastic bags, were being moved into the embassy, the hostages were being moved out, transferred to cities such as Tabriz and Qom, Tehran Radio said. There were hints Iran might demand a payoff for return of the bodies.

Iranian President Abolhassan Bani-Sadr, in an interview with French radio, said that in light of the U.S. rescue attempt early Friday, "a solution with the Americans is almost impossible." But he also said that "if the Americans guarantee not to interfere in our internal affairs, a solution could quickly be found."

The official Iraqi news agency and Iraqi diplomats abroad denied a Tehran Radio report claiming Iraqi President Saddam Hussein was killed in a coup and his socialist government overthrown.

Ayatollah Sadegh Khalkhali, a leading revolutionary judge, told reporters at the embassy that a giant map taken from one of the abandoned U.S. aircraft showed the commandos planned to strike 14 centers in Tehran, including the home of Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini, the Iranian leader.

He claimed 18 planes, 20 helicopters and 3,000 men were involved in the mission.

A Tehran Radio broadcast quoted the Iranian militants as saying Sunday that an unspecified number of hostages had arrived in Tabriz, the capital of Azerbaijan Province in northern Iran. It did not say when they left Tehran. The captors said other hostages, in their 176th day of captivity Sunday, were to be sent to Qom, Iran's religious capital, about 100 miles south of Tehran.

An editorial in Jomhori Islami, the newspaper of the hard-line Islamic Republican Party, said the bodies of the servicemen should be held in Iran until Washington releases Iranian assets frozen in the United States. President Carter ordered the freeze Nov. 14, 10 days after the Islamic militants seized the American Embassy.

Bani-Sadr said Saturday the bodies would be returned to America "with no conditions attached," but the editorial said, "These bodies have political value for us."

Linksters win tri-match

By BOB MITCHELL
Collegian Staff

The UMass men's gold team blasted Amherst College, 387-418, Friday in a tri-match at Hickory Ridge C.C. in Amherst. Stockbridged finished third with 456.

The Minutemen, who are playing in the New Englands today and tomorrow at New Seabury C.C. in Mashpee, played well and acquired some needed confidence in earning the 31-stroke win over Amherst.

Jim Bjorge led the UMass linksters, firing a one-over-par 73 to capture the medalist honors. Senior Bob Robichaud, coming back from an ankle injury, shot a fine 77.

Bob Gladchuck finished with 84, Rich Murphy and Tony Kelley 83 and Joe Tamsey 88 to round out the Minutemen scoring.

Colin Wooden led the Lord Jeffs with 79, while mates Pete Roisman and Sandy Sterrett shot 80 and 82 respectively. Stockbridge was led by Joe Giels and Jim Latour who both finished with 85. The rest of the Stockbridge squad finished over 90.

The Minutemen, who finished strong in second place in the Salem State Tournament last week, figure to place well in the 36-hole New Englands which usually has over 30 teams competing.

Mark Duggan, Gladchuck, Robichaud, Murphy and Kelley are the UMass golfers at New Seabury. Steve Midttun, the fine Minutemen freshman, will sit out the remainder of the schedule due to academic priorities.

The UMass squad travels to Manchester C.C. in Manchester, N.H. Thursday for the two-day, 36-hole NCAA Division I qualifying tournament. The winner of the 16-team tourney goes to Columbus, Ohio to compete in the nationals.

Trackwomen run second

By TIM TONNER
Collegian Staff

The UMass women's track team took second place with 42 points, turning out several strong individual performances in a competitive tri-meet Saturday against the University of Rhode Island, the overall winner with 92 points, and Southern Connecticut College which finished third with 32 points at the URI track in Kingston, Rhode Island.

Facing URI's superior ability in the field events, UMass' Diane Boczanowski took fourth in the discus with a throw of 113'3", her personal best by five feet.

UMass picked up second place in the javelin when Karen Snow threw 134'6". Snow also had a good day at the Penn Relays Thursday finishing 8th in the javelin against tough national competition.

The best team performance for the Minutewomen took place in long jump. Finishing second, third, and fourth respectively were teammates Angie Caouette, with a jump of 16'2½" followed by Micki Callahan, also leaping 16'2½", and Jackie Budrow close behind with 16'1½".

In the rinning events, UMass Diana Sealey took the first place spots in the 200-meter dash with a time of 26.4 seconds and in the 400-meter run, finishing with a UMass record time of 57.4. The 800-meter event featured an exciting race for first with UMass' Cyndi Martin just getting beaten at the wire, taking second place in 2:16.2. UMass also picked up some points in the 110-meter high hurdles when Micki Callahan placed second with a time of 16.1 seconds.

Sophomore Tricia Moores doubled in the distant events with a personal best of 4:55 in the 1500 meters and with a third place time of 10:28.5 in the 3000 meter event. Also running the 1500 was Judy McCrone who took second in 4:43.9.

Gorillas hold off stubborn UNH, 17-13

By DONNA SULLIVAN
Collegian Staff

A fourth quarter Wildcat surge, a father and son match up, and a tire blow-out that stranded the Gorillas for two hours were the highlights in this weekend's "world of UMass lacrosse." With the help of freshman goalie Chris Benedetto who made three key saves in the final quarter, the Gorillas stunted a New Hampshire team that kept gaining momentum, and came to within four goals of UMass late in the fourth quarter.

UNH is a fourth quarter team but its surge was not enough to overcome the eight goal Gorilla lead at the beginning of the fourth quarter as UMass brought its record to 7-2 with the 17-13 win in Durham Saturday.

"Chris has come up with some real good saves in the critical parts of the last few games," head coach Dick Garber said. "Defensively we got a little disjointed and disoriented. They scored six goals in the last quarter but they were playing really well," he said.

Both teams looked strong in the first quarter, in which the Wildcats had their only lead of the afternoon in the period, a 3-2 lead that was erased when attackman Jim Weller scored his first goal of the day. After checking a UNH midfielder, UMass' Mike Lewis stole the ball, passed to Skip Vosburgh, Vosburgh passed to Chris Corin and Corin assisted Weller in the score. New Hampshire played catch-up lacrosse for the rest of the game.

The UMass defense, led by co-captain Paul Kinnane, held the Wildcats to three goals until the final minutes of the half when John Fay assisted Mike Vanleck in UNH's fourth tally.

In the beginning of the fourth quarter the Gorillas had a comfortable 15-7 lead that was chopped down to 15-11 in less than seven minutes. But time ran out on the Wildcats as they could not muster a strong enough attack in the remaining minutes.

Vosburgh led the scoring drive with five goals and one assist. Jim Weller tallied four goals and four assists. All of the 17 goals were assisted with co-captain Peter Schmitz assisting four. UMass fielded 67 ground balls to UNH's 60; UMass' Lewis won 17 of 21 face offs.

"I think it is fun," UNH head coach Ted Garber said about playing against his dad's team. "He is the best coach in college lacrosse and if you do well against him it shows you something about yourself."

UMass' Sr. Garber agreed that father vs. son is good fun. "Ted played at UNH and it was harder playing against them when he played there," said Garber Sr.

It would have a great day for a win but the bus carrying the laxmen home from their victory blew out a tire near Lowell. After being stranded for about two hours, relief finally came. The Gorillas face Army at home on Saturday.

UNH 9th Laxwomen victim, 8-4

By MAUREEN SULLIVAN
Collegian Staff

Goals may win the game, but it was the UMass defense that gave the women's lacrosse team an 8-4 win over the University of New Hampshire Saturday on the NOPE fields.

Patti Bossio, Judy Strong, Maria Minicucci, and senior Laura O'Neil bottled up a speedy and skillful Wildcat squad led by Janet Cope. Intercepting and checking, UMass managed to rob UNH of the ball many times and convert to offense quickly.

For the first few minutes of the game, UMass and UNH played a breakaway kind of lacrosse, trying to bomb away from defenders and score quickly. UNH did just that to score the first goal at 2:00. Whitney Thayer tied up the score 24 seconds later. The game settled down as both teams tried to elude each other's defenses and wait for a perfect opportunity. Gazell captain Jean Hackett found the opportunity, executing an over-the-shoulder shot to the left of the UNH goalie to put the Gazelles ahead 2-1. With the Wildcats tying it up at 15:35, UMass began dominating on the field, keeping UNH from getting the ball with passing and cradling; the Gazelles possessed the ball most of the time, especially around the UNH goal. A minor eruption of scoring for UMass began at 18:17, when Hackett assisted Thayer in the go-ahead tally. That was followed two minutes later by Margie Anderson's goal, which had help from Hackett. She also helped out in the final goal at 21:25, scored by senior Cari Nickerson. The half ended with UMass ahead, 5-2.

Nickerson assisted Thayer in the Gazelles' sixth goal at 2:24 of the second half, a dart that escaped the UNH goalie as it went by her right side. As the defenses kept the ball around midfield, both teams experienced close calls with missed checks and trips. O'Neil and her UNH counterpart tripped on the field twice, while players on both sides were awarded yellow warning cards for rough checking. UNH made it 6-3 at 14:32, a dribble of a shot that rolled by Gazelle goalie Robin Jennings. With help from Margie Anderson, Nickerson scored UMass goal number seven a minute later. At 19:00, Thayer finished the scoring for UMass. The Wildcats had the last hurrah, scoring the final goal of the game at 20:30. The game ended as it began, with both teams patiently passing, running, checking, and waiting for the perfect shot.

"The defese did a super job," UMass coach Pam Hixon said. "They helped set up our attack by bottling up theirs. Judy, Laura, Maria and Patti did great."

The game marked the final home appearance for Gazelle seniors Jean Hackett, Cari Nickerson, Julie McHugh, Laura O'Neil, Robin Jennings, and Julie Hall, who did not play.

UMass will play its final game of the season Thursday against Yale University.

Penn Relays a good time for McCrone

Philadelphia—Shattering the school record in the women's 3000 meter run by an amazing 22 seconds Judy McCrone was the highlight of the Penn Relays for UMass' track team as she finished fourth in the 3000 with a time of 9:39.1 qualifying her for the nationals by a decisive five seconds.

McCrone, along with eleven other UMass competitors, competed in the 86th annual running of the Penn Relays held this weekend at the University of Pennsylvania.

The men's team competed in seven different relays on Friday and Saturday.

The relay team of John Wright, Bill DeVarney, Rick Cady, and tri-captain Rick Trunfio set a new school record with a time of 42.9 in the 4 x 100.

In the 4 x 1500 Rick Walls equalled his best time of the year running a 3:49.5. Leading off was Steve MacDougall at 3:51.2, running the third leg was Paul Beaulieu at 3:56.8 and running the anchor was freshman Rick Doiron, their overall time at 15:40.6.

Competing in the 4x 440 was Trunfio, 500, Cady 40.0, tri-captain Mickey Baugh, 48.6, and Bob Pearson, 49.6, with the total time being 3:17.3.

Another strong event for the Minutemen was the distance medley which was won by Villanova University. UMass finished with a time of 9:58.2. MacDougall ran the leadoff leg 1200 meters and handed off to Pearson for his quarter at 51.5; the half-mile leg was run by Baugh at 1:53.9. Running the anchor was Walls in the mile at 4:10.

Mittwomen take 3, now 15-0

The UMass softball team continued to roll this weekend as it defeated Boston State College and Keene State College, boosting its record to 15-0.

The Minutewomen took a double header from Boston State, 17-1, 13-0, Saturday and downed the Owls, 11-2, yesterday.

In the make-up game at Keene, Sue Peters fell behind surrendering two runs on four of the five Owls' hits. An unearned tally scored by Jen Parker, who had singled, cut the deficit in half before UMass struck for five runs in the third.

Jackie Gaw led off with a home run followed by Peter's single, her first of three hits for the day. A pass ball and an error put Peters and Brenda Simmons at the corners, place setting Kathy O'Connell's sacrifice fly and singles by Fran Cornacchioli and Debbie Stolecki. Tina Coffin reached on a Keene miscue which plated Cornacchioli and Stolecki.

UMass continued the offensive show with four more runs in the next inning. Peters and O'Connell tripled and Cornacchioli belted a two-run round tripper.

Peters went three-for-five in posting her seventh win. Getting two hits apiece in the 14-hit barrage were Coffin and Cornacchioli.

The Minutewomen garnered 14 hits in each contest against the Bostonians, and the hurlers did not allow an earned run.

Freshman Mary Ann Lombardi, who has played right field most of the season, hurled a shutout in her first mound assignment. Lombardi gave up eight hits and fanned three. She received offensive help in the 13-0 decision from Karen Laverdiere's three hits, including a homer. Simmons contributed three hits for four RBIs while catcher Gaw chipped in two hits.

O'Connell was the beneficiary of UMass' clout in the first game of the twinbill. The righthand pitcher doubled twice and Parker singled and doubled.

Mittmen gain split with Vermont

By JANE WOLFSON
Collegian Staff

In a surprising turn of events the UMass baseball team (12-8-1) split a doubleheader with the lowly Catamounts of the Univeristy of Vermont (6-9) Saturday afternoon at Burlington 2-4 and 2-1.

In the open, senior righthander Jim Lewis dropped his second game of the season against no wins and gave up seven hits, as the Wildcats scored three runs in the second inning on the way to a 4-2 win.

UMass' only scoring came in the fourth inning when leftfielder Mark Litano walked, stole second, and scored on a double by catcher Dave Oleksak. Oleksak later came across on a single by third basemen Barry Bennett.

UVM added its final run in the bottom of the fourth. The winning pitcher for Vermont was lefthander Chip Zigler now at 3-1. Zigler walked one and struck out none.

"He wasn't an overpowering pitcher," coach Dick Bergquist said. "He just had good control and pitched a good game."

In the second game UMass' Vin Todd made his debut as a starter a successful one. Usually a relief pitcher, Todd surrendered only two hits in seven innings for his first victory as UMass bats livened enough for a 2-1 victory.

CRAEMEN GETHERS TO BE RELEASED

Back in the year 1975 Craement Gether, then a UMass student was convicted for alledgely robbing the MacDonald's on route 9 in Hadley. Craemen was presently serving time at the prison in Framington. He had been incarcerated since 1975 having served time in both Norfolk and Walpole prisons before he was transferred to Framingham.

The conviction came at the end of a series of trials which even the most inept lawyer would see as being totally ridiculous to the pursuit of justice. A review of the case, the trials, and its background should have revealed the true indication as to the type of justice which brother Craemen Gethers, had received.

Craemen Gethers has now been released. How is he to replace the five missing years of his life?

Panel Discussion on the Future of Blacks

Curtis Haynes

On Monday April 21 a panel discussion was held at the Malcom X Center, concerning the future of blacks in America. The speakerswere Bill Strickland from the Afro American department, Tony Crayton from the Office of Third World Affairs and Mel King a state representative from Boston.

Mr Strickland began the panel discussion by elaborating on the aspects of an independent black political party in the USA. He believed that the major contemporary parties have failed to represent the needs of blacks in this country. Quoting from The Gary Conference Report of 1972, Mr Strickland stated: "For more than a century we have followed the path of political dependence on white men and their systems. From the Liberty Party in the decades before the Civil War to the Republican Party of Abraham Lincoln, we trusted in white men and white politics as our deliverers. Sixty years ago, W.E.B. DuBois said he would give the Democrats their "last chance" to prove their sincere commitment to equality for Black people and he was given white riots and official segregation in peace and in war.

Nevertheless, some twenty years later we became Democrats in the name of Franklin Roosevelt, then supported his successor, Harry Truman and even tried a "non-partisan" Republican General of the Army named Eisenhower. We were wooed like many others by the superficial liberalism of John F. Kennedy and the make-believe populi[illegible] Johnson. Let there be no more of that." Today, we are faced with the "Carter Mystery." In light of these problems Mr. Strickland called for a radical change, by saying, "Those who created the system will not be the ones to change it." We as blacks, must change a system that is profit motivated, individualistic, exploitative, and unjust. We are living the "last margain of an illusion." Things have got to change.

In regards to making this change Tony Crayton spoke on the organizing of the Third World communities. Mr Crayton warned that in the 1980s the struggle will be more indepth and dangerous, as compared to that of the 60s. We were reminded that the events of the 60s put black faces in white institutions but the clock is being turned back in light of "reverse discrimination" and the many other subtle methods of reducing minority envolvement in higher education. Also, many blacks felt they could make it as individuals but the fact remained that they were still black in a white dominated society.

According to Tony Crayton we must organize our own communities in the spirit of the leaders who have died before us. We must also remember that those in Africa and the Caribbeans are much closer relations than many of use think.

Mel King, eleborated on the remarks of both BillStrickland and Tony Crayton. He open his comments by stating that he has not voted for a white person in thelast four presidential elections. However, he

The demands made by the Third World Woman's Task Force should be met. The Everywomen's Center should be thankful that the Task Force would be willing to interview the candidates for the Third World Advocate position. Who would be in a better position to pick the Advocate than some of the people she would be representing. The Third World community should have had this opportunity along time ago.

It should be obivous that this incidence was the spark that ignited the fire. One of the workers of the Everywomen's Center said that she expected something to happen along time before this incident. Could it be that the Center thought it was losing control and had to put some people in their place. When the confrontation started two Third World Women were placed under the firing squad. They entered the meeting unaware of what was to come. Why were they asked to defend their political view on the issue. I thought America was known for having the secret ballot, the closed curtain when you voted on or for something. They were forced to make their political stand public.

Racists attitudes at the Everywomen's Center would not invite Third World people, at large, to utilize the Center, maybe that was the point, that was just over looked. ●

The Third World Women's Task Force, in spite of resistance from the Every Women's Center, is making gains in terms of trying result of community support.

But the battle still is not over. The Center is trying as hard as possible to give us as little as possible. The way it tries to accomplish this is by being very bureaucratic. Behind its mask of liberal-sounding language, it continues to find "reasonable" excuses for not giving us what we ask for. In this way the Center's staff tries to give the picture that they are on our side, while at the same time allowing institutional racism to continue. We of the Third World Women's Task Forces of course do not accept this.

In order to make clear what has happened between the Center and us during the last week, we are giving three pieces of information below. They are: (a) our demands, (b) the Center's response to our demands and (c) our reply to their response. It is necessary to do this in order to show the subtle way in which they try to undercut what we have asked for, and yet at the same time claim they are "absolutely committteed" to helping us. Such behavior is the core of institutional racism, which always tries to wear a friendly smile.

A. OUR DEMANDS.

1. The person applying for the Third World Advocate position will have to be approved by the Third World Women's Task Force:

a. The advocate will be accountable to the Third World Women's Task Force.

b. The advocate will be expected to communicate effectively to the needs and concerns of the Third World Women's Task Force and all Third World Women.

c. The advocate will be accountable to the goals and objectives of the Third World Women's Task Force.

2. The Third World Advocate will not function as an individual, but as a representative of the Task Force within Everywoman's center.

3. The Center will be evaluated concerning their ability to work in non-racist ways with Third World people and the extent to which programs are effective in meeting the needs of Third World Women. The Third World Women's Task Force will oversee and coordinate this evaluation.

4. At least four Third World Professional staff will be hired for next year.

5. The position of Third World Advocate should be managed by 2-full time professional staff.

B. Every Women Center's Response to our Demands
The following:

Demand 1 & 2.

We agree to and fully support demands 1 2. They will serve to safeguard the understanding of the position that has grown up over the past two years. We agree that it is appropriate that the Task Force approve the Third World Advocate and we would view the involvement of the Task Force as positive and a real gain for all connected to the Center.

Demand 3

We would view the development of a Third World Women's Task Force Advisory Group to be a valuable resource in evaluating the effectiveness of the Center and its programs in meeting the needs of Third World people, and in dealing with issues of racism, We will work actively with the Task Force in the development of such a group.

Demand 4

We are absolutely committed to increasing the numbers of Third World women on the staff. It is our intention not to accept any cutbacks for next year and we plan to, at least, maintain our present ten positions. Third World women who meet the job qualifications will be hired. We would like involvement of the Third World Women's Task Force members in reviewing applicants throughout the hiring process.

Demand 5

Over and above maintaining our present positions, we are committed to actively pushing for an increase in number of staff positions, and we would give top priority to a second Third World Advocate.

C. Our Reply to Their Response

You haven't been as clear as you might have in responding to our demands. Because of this, we will give you some feedback on your response.

Demands 1 & 2

Your response was acceptable.

Demand 3

You will not participate in the development of the evaluation group. We will do this. The problem to be solved is the Center's racism and we are the ones who are therefore equipped to bring into being the anti-racist evaluating committee. Your role in this is that you are the ones to be evaluated.

Demand 4

Your wording is vague and bureaucratic. We said 4 positions and we meant it. Respond to this. Be clear. Also we don't like your condescending remard that your will hire Third World women "who meet the job qualifications". We know as well as you about job qualifications and therefore you do not have to remind us. In order to prevent racism in this area however, we and not you will have the major say about whether or not Third World applicants are qualified.

Demand 5

Committment to pushing for an increase in the number of staff positions is not the same thing as saying "There will be a second Third World Advocate position because we are willing to do whatever necessary to restructure the Center in such a way as to meet the needs of Third World people." Be clear and to the point. We have demanded a second fulltime Advocate position and this is what we want.

In order for you to fulfill our demands, you must be in agreement with the ideas put forward above, under demands 3, 4 and 5. We want your answer to this by 9 o'clock Tuesday morning, April 29. An unsatisfactory response on your part will force us to look for other-more activist-ways to slove this problem.

Also, we want to know that the Task Force's position on Suman and Jamila is the same as it was before: since you have not dropped your politically backward charges against them, they will continue to not attend staff meetings.

If you want to support the Third World Women's Task Force in their struggle against racism at Every Women's Center, pleas contact Naledi Nkomo at 549-4765. ●

TO: Everywoman's Center
Third World Woman's Task Force

FROM: The Bilingual Collective

The Bilingual Collective of the School of Education, University of Massahcusetts is responding to the unfortunate and unjust situation created for third world women at the Everywoman's Center. We are concerned with the insensitivity of the staff and directorship who are supporting acts of racism towards Jamila Gaston, Suman Bohm, and Oare Dozier. These actions have forced these staff members to request resignatioin from their positon since they were subject to unjust accusations and unequal treatment.

We wholeheartedly support the demands given to the Center by the Third World Woman's Task Force since these are fair and reasonable. We are grateful that this organization has to come to the forefront to protect the rights of these third world women at such a crucial time and under such difficult circumstances.

We encourage the Everywoman's Center to respond to these demands as they only serve to coreect the present situation, and make this service organization one that truly responds to and reflects the needs of EVERY WOMAN! ●

To the Editor

Suman Bohm's article "Racism at Everywoman's Center" contains a factual inaccuracy we think important to dicussion.

She states that the Internation Women's Week workshop around which the conflict centered was entitled "taking progressive positions on the mid-east." Since a Jew was to give the workshop, Suman felt that this "replicated part of the basic problem: non-Palestinians speaking for Palestinians."

This is wrong. The workshop was entitled "Jewish women in progressive middle east movements." The intention was never to have one person speak for another's people. Quite the opposite: only a Jew can speak for Jews. Furthermore, the speaker was more than willing to speak with a Palestinian in order to prevent speaking for anyone else that anti-semitism has been implied to have no real role in this conflict, and that it is only a mask for white racism.

turn to page 3

We do not invalidate Suman's criticisms of the Everywoman's Center. At the same time, we insist on our own reality being heard.

Most Jews in Israel are not there out of choice. Over one-third were forced there after all of the Western world collaborated in their extermination, and them refused them any sanctuary after the Holocaust ended. More than half were driven out of their ancestral homes by reactionary Arab governments. Very few had any choice except to rely upon each other. Most of the rest fled the anti-semitic fraction of the Soviet and other governments.

To say that they Jewish people in Israel have no legitimate presence it to ignore the realities of Jewish survival. This is the deepest anti-semitism.

The Israeli government is as reactionary as any capitalist government. But this does not invalidate the Jewish struggle any more than U.S. imperialism negates the struggles of the American people. Both the Palestinian people and the Jewish people have the right to self-determiniation and their own national homeland.

Israeli women are at the center of the struggles of the Jewish people to survive, of the resistance to Begin's racist policies, and of the efforts to liberate women in the mid-east. They deserve to be heard.

Silencing them means equating the Jewish people with the Israeli state. The Israeli state, like any capitalist state, should be met by revolution; the Jewish people should be met with support. It is ant-semitic when the elemental political distinctions (e.g. state|people) routinely applied to other groups are not applied to Jews. It is anti-semitic when Jewish voices are silenced, and the Jewish presence made invisible.

The conscious intent in cancelling the workshop was opposition to the Isaeli government. The effect was to censor the Jewish people.

Suman's charges of racism have concrete causes. They are not merely a mask for anti-semitism. Similarly, anti-semitism must be acknowledged as a reality rather than dismissed as being beside the point.

Towards a New Black Consciousness

By Yvonne Chirean

In the 70's young Black Americans turned their backs upon the great political and social issues that their counterparts had had to address during the 60's. The turn was inward, away from society,toward an internal focus on the self.An American social critic once termed this era as being the "Me"decade, aperiod of individualistic ideals which produced a fallacious character whose regression toward egoism has ultimately lead to political and social stagnancy. What are the consequences of this move of self-preoccupation for the Black student, or upon Black society itself? I believe that we cannot afford to be complacent in the face of institutionalized oppression and national repression. We can't afford to simply accept the progressivism of the 60's as"things that happened" and discard the commitment that went along with these changes. Perhaps, as Angelas Davis suggests, the agressive challenges to unjust national policies have shifted from student to the young working class; perhaps the challenges will become apparent in the light of a young worker's consciousness. But what of student consciousness? If Black student activism is on the decline we can expect a similiar decline of political awareness. Consequently a failure among ourselves to be able to analyze and criticize present values will occur. Hopefully, the silence of Black students reflects a period of transition toward a renewal of action in the eighties –which would, ideologically, provide an effective vehicle for change.●

By Yvonne Chirean

I'm sure we're all aware of the presence of the media and how power can be used to manipulate. The phrase of journalistss been coined"the pen is mightier than the sword." Conclusive studies have proven that television is an effective "mass brainwasher"However, radio is one field of communication thatis yet to be explored for its influence on society.

In the past years, "ethnic" progamming (soul, jazz, latin, and reggae music) on radio has increased considerably. Non-commercial radiohas shown itself to be a plausible alternative to television and journalistic publications whichare bombarded withpropaganda and media hype. One may ask if anyone realizes how useful a tool radio maybe for the Black and Third World community.

In light of the situation at WFCRconcerningthe abrogationof Que TalAmigos, we must be aware of the necessity of maintaining Third World programming on radio. Most of the colleges in the area own licensed radio stations, all of which carry some type of programming with appeal to the Third World community. But actually how "ethnic" is this programming? Is it educational. Does it carry any political message? Is it culturally scholastic?To use an example, one can, on a local college radio station, hear "Rappers Delight" for five timesin 12 hours---but not hear of the latest Third World developments, relevant information that may effect you or I. It's about time thatsome of the local radio stations start implementing structure programmingdirected toward raising the political, social, and cultural consciousness of the student.For example, BMCP has a system by which it is mandatory for every disc jockey to play something "political" or culturally enlightening on his show. Accordingly, such a requirement would coerce the disc jockey into taking some care in choosing what he or she plays. Possibly, a political theme could be incorported into the program.

Non-commerical radio, epecially within the college area,has the potentialfor being an extremelypowerful communications media. It should and must be used to the advantage of the Third World audience. Maybe then we can stop "hip-hip-hopping"and get on the move. ●

To the Editor:

I was happy to see that Foad Vafaei's article on Palestine was accompanied by another one on anti-semitism. Too often the effort is not made to connect these issues on the left. However, in the spirit of comradely criticism, I would like to disagree with several of his points.

1) It is not true that "Anti-semitism grew up in early 19th century Europe." Although the Jewish people are over 4000 years old, anti-semitism is usually dated from the Roman massacres and diaspora of about 2000 years ago. It has cyclically recurred over most of the world with especial virulence in Europe and Russian. Anti-semitism is probably the oldest reacism.

2) I don't know where Foad got the figure 4.7 million Jews massacred in the Holocaust. Helen Fein, author of Accounting for Genocide, said that the lowest estimate was 5.5 million, which seemed far too low, and that Eichmann himself had estimated will over 6 million. But the point is not to quibble over such horrible numbers. It is wrong to become obsessed with the Holocaust, but it is equally wrong to minimize it or to imply that it has no special historical significance.

3) The Holocaust was an expression of the profound anti-semitism of the masses of Europeans. It was not just the Nazi leaders who were the animals. Although there were many examples of heroic resistance to the Holocaust by both Jews and non-Jews, the bulk of Europeans actively or passively collaborated in it. This brings me to the last, and most important, point.

4) Foad think the Jews should not have fled to Israel, but "should stay in their native countries and struggle against anti-semitism and capitalism." In other words, they should have gone back to their nonexistant families and their nonexistant neighborhoods and their nonexistant property and unite with the people who had just committed genocide against them in order to build socialism in Europe.

In fact, many Jews did go back to try to find their families. In Polands, for example, they were greeted by lynch mobs and a full scale pogrom in Kielce, and many hundreds were murdered.

On the one hand, this is just ultra-leftism - asking people to do the impossible. But on the other hands, it reflects a gross insensitivety to the position of Jews after the War. The Jews could not go "home," and not one country on earth offered them sanctuary. The Jews who went to Israel had no choice, and the resulting colonization of the Palestinians must be understood as one more tragedy of the Holocaust.

Anti-semitism is an important part of Mideast politics. The active collaboration of most Arab governments with the Nazis, the expulsion of hundreds of thousands of Sephardic Jews after the 1948 war, alongside military threats the continual use of anti-semitic propogandaby the Arab governments, and the use of terrorism against civilians (as opposed to politicians or soldiers) continually reinforces the survival gestalt of Israeli politics. Just as those Zionists who discuss Israel without reference to its colonial nature misstate the whole issue, those leftists who leave out anti-semitism distort the real forces at work.

Nummo News' attention to anti-semitism is thus most welcome and I hope it continues.

Who Runs the "Government" of IRAN

By Foad Vafaei

In order to understand the process of the Iranian revolution, probably the most important question to be asked, is "who has the power in IRAN?" In order to answer this question patience is necessary, many other questions have to be raised first and some historical background is needed.

The Shah of Iran was imposed on the Iranian people by the United States and Britian in 1941 following the invasion of Iran by the U.S. In 1951 a crisis developed over the issue of Western oil corporations' involvement in IRAN. A popular movement was demanding that Iranian government takes over the Iranian oil resources by expropriating the American and British profit-mongerous corporations who were exploiting the country's natural resources. A leader of the movement, Dr Mossadegh was elected as prime minister with 99 percent of the votes. He nationalized the Iranian oil industry. But that went against the American capitalists interests. So, in a notorious coup d'etat staged by the American CIA, the Shah was imposed again on the Iranian people and Mossadegh was overthrown. i.e. By the help of the CIA advisers, a dark age of repression began.

In 1957, SAVAK (the secret police), was created with the help of the CIA advisers.

SAVAK became the instrument of cruelest tyranny of the world for political repression. Its main task was to make sure than even any kind of individual opposition to the Shah was destroyed under torture (e.g. Whipping, beating, electric shocks, extraction of finger nails and teeth, heavy weight hung on the testicles, raping, etc.). By 1975 SAVAK had closed down 95 percent of all publication is IRAN. No book could be distributed without the permission of SAVAK. SAVAK's power was absolute and arbitrary.

All that created a lucrative field for investments for over 500 American corporations in IRAN. And that explains the notorious support of the Shah by the American government.

It is clear that the American government (whether dominated by the Democrats or the Republicans) works hand in hand with the big business. The corporation, having consolidated their control over the U.S. economy, have been trying to suck profit out of the people of the under developed countries.

All the governments which are "friendly" to the U.S. are simply set up to create fertile grounds for the investment of U.S.-based corporation. Therefore the U.S. "allies" have to use repressive methods against their own people. This process leads to misery and poverty in Asia, Africa, Latin America, and the middle east. In order to preserve that wretched status quo in the third world, America imperialism has to maintain a strong army. (The U.S. has the highest military budget on the earth 140 billion dollars!)

In the U.S., land, industry, mines and the means of transportation are owned by a small minority of capitalists. In order to survive the majority of American have to work for them. The monpolies enrich themselves by taking the goods made by working people and selling them for huge profits.

American imperialism is simply the expansionism of those monpolies to the underdeveloped area. The American monopolies make huge profits by sucking the economy of those countries through investments.

While a small minority of indigenous capitalists benefit from the American imperialism. So the pro-U.S. governments in the third world are based on the pro-U.S. indigenous capitalists. But meanwhile for the impoverished masses of people in those countries. Censions and conflicts are created. American imperialism creates inflation, corruption, misery, and severe inequalities for the peoples of the third world.

No revoltution can be understood without taking into account this fact. And the Iranian revolution is no exception.

As a result of severe economic and social conflicts created by 25 years of American domination, the Iranian revolution took place in 1978. The Iranian revolution sought to overthrow the U.S. backed Shah's regime, when the latter proved incapable of solving the problems of the society.

During a spontaneous revolutionary movement that started on January 78, and ended in February 70, the Iranian masses overthrew with merely empty hands one of the most oppressive regimes of the world with the most sophisticated arsenal.

The reason why the progressive sector of the Islamic clergy established its hegemony over the anti-imperialist mass mobilization, are complicated. Many reason could be cited: the Iranian society is an religious society. In Islam, every aspect of life is under the religious rules. Islam is a force present in all aspects of the Iranian social life. All desires, hopes, and political beliefs have been expressed for 1400 years through Islam. Therefore even the progressive anti-Imperiaist aspirations of masses took religious forms.

In fact, in the care of all the anti-imperialist revolutions worthy of the name (e.g. Cuba, Nicaragua, China). What seems to be decisive for the revolution to occur, is the conjunction of the national objectives, with a tradition on the whole favorable to change and a set of goals being to mobilize the people. However, in the case of Iran, all these were identified with Islam; that is to say Islam replaced nationalism in mobilizing people against imperialism and also played the role of the ideology of the revolution (i.e. the demand for an Islamic republic).

For an anti-imperialist revolution to be really successful, it has to do away with the barbaric system of capitalism and achieve the goals of socialism. In some cases (such as Cuban revolution) the revolution was radical enough not only to overthrow the U.S. backed regime but also to bring about radical social changes against the oppressive social structure. That means achieving the goals of a socialist revolution:

I- Transformation of the capitalist property relations to social ones and setting up of a planned economy. That's the only way to achieve real independence for IRAN or any other third world society.

II-The decisive role of the industrial working class in the transformation: Exploited directly in the industrial field did vote forDick Gregory twice, Julian Bond, and in the last election he wrote in his own sons name. In all seriousnessMr King told the crowd "it is time to vote for what youwant, not what you are told you can get." He expressedalarm in the fact that many black leaders have announced their support for President Carter in the up comingelections. He attributed this to the fact that Carter "knows how to control the black vote," something that blacks have not been able to do. Thus, we are linked to the policies of a non-partisan President.

In commenting on the status of blacks he stated that many of use are in college strickly by luck. We could or possibly will be in prison, (as in the case of Craeman Gethers and other incarcerated brothers and sisters).

As Mr King continued to speak, he spoke on the fact that many blacks feel that the no nuke, anti draft, and environmental safety movement are for whites only. But the reality is that we breath the same air, drink the same water, an-if the bomb was dropped, we would die, just like the man next to us. Thus, Mel King encouraged blacks to get involved because it is their lives which are at stake too. ●

CHINA ENTERS THE 1980s

The mood in China as the 1980s begin, and a post-Mao policy line is consolidated, is one of cautious hopefulness. There is a fervent desire for progress, blended with an acute awareness of the limits on future possibilities. Of all the differences since the great but oppressive Mao Zedong was embalmed in 1976, there are four which stand out.

First, people high and low see economic growth as China's highest priority. In the factories the slogans are about output, product quality and competitions between teams of workers: the conversations in the canteens are about pay packets and what to spend them on. Some private enterprise is returning to the cities, to provide much desired special products and services, and to alleviate an increasingly serious unemployment problem. The spirit of industry has been galvanized by the assertion from on high that profit and market response are the only valid measures of industrial performance.

In most of the countryside political and bureaucratic pressures on the farmers have been eased, to spur them to grow more by growing what they want to grow. In town and village alike, hard work and initiative (as well as birth control) are being rewarded in cash; one-sixth of an industrial wage can hinge on a bonus, and one-fourth of a farm income can come from private cultivation. Even the young urban dissident are part of the age of economics. They have been selling their leaflets-unlike dissidents in the rest of the Marxist world, who tend to give their literature away; even Wei Jingsheng, the outspoken young editor who was jailed for "counterrevolutionary activity" last year, said at his trial: "We publish our magazines for the purpose of...making China more prosperous and powerful."

One cannot but recall how Mao in 1965 reminded Andre Malraux of Soviet Premier Aleksei Kosygin's remark, "Communism means the raising of living standards," and then sneeringly dismissed it: "and swimming is a way of putting on a pair of trunks." "Politics in command," which was Mao's update of Confucian social moralism, has given way to "production in command." The government tells the citizens to work hard and to reach for material rewards; "politics in command" effectively discounted both.

The traditional materialism of the Chinese has reappeared, then, as the shackles of an overplanned economy have been pulled back a little. Under Mao, China as a nation stood up. In these post-Mao years the Chinese individual is trying to stand up and claim a place in sun.

A second change is nothing less than the castration Of Marxism. One aspect is theoretical: class struggle is no longer talked about or believed in. A practical aspect forlows: the tentacles of ideology have been untwined from one realm after another of Chinese life.

People may go to the opera or watch an evening of television without hearing any Marxist message. In the schools the running battle between "red" and "expert" has been won resoundingly by professional who say education means the learning of expertise or else it means nothing. Even topics such as management science and the analysis of World War II's nature and causes have been approached without Marxism as the compass. The mask of ideology has been pulled back from the face of Chineses cilvilization. Indeed, this is true visually: the decline of slogans and banners frees the eye to notice more of the architecture, social ways, harmonies and chaos of Chinese daily life.

The change here, to borrow terms from political science, looks like a de-escalation from totalitarianism (where nothing is valuefree) to authoritarianism (where the power of the state is not coincident with the sovereignty of an ideology). A 1961 speech of Zhou Enlai, resurrected in 1979, sums up the new line: scientists, writers and other professionals don't have to be interested in politics, the former Premier said, as long as they do their work well and do not actively oppose socialism.

The political process itself is taking on a post-ideological flavor. No figure is being built up-as Hua Guofeng was during 1977-as a Red Emperor in Mao's image. Premier (and Communist Party Chairman) Hua is now merely termed "China's most sen or leader." Budgets are published; differences of opinion are recorded in a relaxed way; long speeches are given without any quote from Marx, Lenin or Mao. Politics as a near-religious ritual, in which a demigod above tossed out the Word to adoring masses below, is being replaced by politics as a pedestrian adjustment of interests.

"Seeking truth from facts" is now said by Beijing to be the essence of Marxism. Mao, during the Cultural Revolution of the 1960s, told the Red Guards that "It is right to rebel" was Marxism's summation. Karl Marx might have found shortcomings in both formulations; yet the change from one to the other is enormous in its implications. An ideological crisis that had been building up in China for some years, caused by a ritualistic continuance of applying class categories to realities that have little to do with class, has been largely diffused. The year 1979 was perhaps the first since the Liberation of 1949 in which no class-related political campaign was in progress whatsoever. One cannot but note that this de-emphasis of ideology has undermined some of the logic of China's denunciation of Soviet society.

A third point-again noticeable from the top of society to the grass roots-is a determination to replace the arbitrariness of the late Mao era with some steps toward a government of laws rather than a government of men. It is in this context that we should see both the "Democracy Wall" phenomenon of 1978-79 and the spate of legislation introduced by the government during 1979; the two are linked in an ambigous way.

When Wei Jinggsheng railed against "the elevation of leaders to the position of deities," Deng and others in the Poliburo knew what he meant, for they themselves suffered in the 1960s from the whims of Emperor Mao. Mao's senior victims, hardly less than the poster-writers and editors of private magazines, appreciate the attractiveness of a steady period under law.

The urban dissident movement speaks of "democracy;" but to few Chinese does the word connote the Western idea of a periodic choice at elections between competing parties. The center of gravity of the concerns of the dissident movement is constitutionalism: fixed rules which permit the citizen to know where he stands; accountability of officials to those rules. A few bold spirits have asked for the replacement of a Marxist system by a Western-type democratic system. At the other extreme are posters and articles in the unauthorized magazines demand adherence to the Constitution and other laws, due process, and a less stifling mental atmosphere in which criticism is not subject to overnight redefinition as "counterrevolution."

So far the constituency of sympathy within the government for the dissidents has been important, and 1979 was a year of notable, if flawed, steps toward constitutionalism-within-Marxism. Rules and regulations are in. The political gymnastics of tossing halos or dunce caps on the heads of supports or foes is happily out.

"Everyone is equal before the law" was one of the new-style official Communist Party slogans for the celebration last October of the 30th anniversary of the People's Republic of China.

A fourth major change-the only one bearing directly on foreign policy-is a wider opening of the door to non-Chinese ideas and foreign policy (which Mao himself wrought as he turned against Russia). New is the level of openness to international economic forces, and to foreign cultural influences.

Foreign trade has more than doubled since Mao died. Beijing is borrowing abroad. Export zones, foreign advertising, foreign bank offices, joint ventures have all suddenly come into existence. Chinese in city parks come up to tourists to practice their foreign language skills, declaring that "foreigners are no longer considered cosmopolitan by past standards. A senior British official in the Hong Kong government shook his head and mused, "Can this really be the same country?" as he compared dealing with China in 1979 with the same enterprise in the 1960s.

China, for so long its own world, seems to be holding out its hand for an indefinite season of give and take with the rest of the world. For years the PRC leaders, including Mao, looked abroad for technique (and during the 1950s would have liked more of it than the West was then interested in offering). But the post-Mao leadership is also looking outside China for some of the ideas for China's development. Self-reliance as a philosophy, as distinct from self-reliance as the mother of certain necessities, has just about died in its tracks. The Chinese are now so eclectic in their approach to modernization-even recently drawing some ideas from South Korea and Bulgaria-that people who have spoken of a "Chinese model" should rethink the matter.

The Chinese tend to exaggerate, and it needs stressing that many things have not changed since the death of Mao and the fall of the so-called Gang of Four ultra-leftrists. In some ways the new mood of frankness and realism brings into sharper relief fundamental facts which still stand in the path of change.

China is still a vast, poor, agricultural country. Some of the current restiveness is due to an awareness of the gap between the living standards of China and those of other countries which the Chinese people hear about through overseas Chinese and other channels. Yet no Chinese government, however brilliant, dedicated or capitalist-minded, could possibly bring the per capita Gross National Product (GNP) of the more than one billion Chinese people to US$1,000 by the year 2000.

In the dialogue which dissatisfied young Chinese, some of them returned from study abroad, are starting to have with foreigners, there is an insistent stress by them on two sober realities: the backwardness of rural China and the unbudgability we are justified in saying that the second reality is heavily dependent on the first. As one young Beijing resident put it in a recent letter, "With the bulk of the population backward, there can be no genuine democracy for all."

For all the switch to production as top priority, the Chinese have not turned overnight into economic animals. It does not seem to an observer that the average Chinese laborer in 1980 works as hard as his counterpart in Hong Kong or Japan or Singapore. Despite a stress on merit in the rhetoric, the dead hand of seniority still has many an institution in its grip, and sons can still inherit factory jobs from their fathers. A high official in an important Beijing organization greeted his visitor with a wave of his arm toward a honeycomb of corridors. "Our organization, like so many in China, has too many people-and very few of them are really trained and capable." In some respects the ideological relaxation is bringing to the fore a disturbing underlying slovenliness and couldn't-care-less attitude in parts of Chinese society.

Even more important, resistance exists to the age of economics. It comes from figures at the center and in the leadership of certain provinces who sympathize with the fallen ultra-leftists, from some of the alienated young "1960s generation," from some rural leaders who see advanced industry, not agriculture, as modernization's beneficiary, and from some lower level

Mitin Publico en el Dia de la Madre

REPRESION Y RESISTENCIA EN AMERICA LATINA

Así se titula el programa organizado en solidaridad con los movimientos de liberacion nacional en America Latina y en condena del apoyo norteamericano a las dictaduras.

El mitin publico sera el sabado, 10 de mayo, la fecha en cuál se celebra en muchos paises latinoamericanos el Dia de las Madres. Uno de los enfoques del programa sera el papel de la mujer en la resistencia a la represion apoyada por los Estados Unidos. En las naciones latinoamericanas oprimidas, las mujeres participan en diferentes formas en las luchas populares: esde vigilias pacificas hasta actividad armada.

Otro enfoque del evento del Dia de las Madres sera la represion y la resistencia en El Salvador. En ese pais hermano las fuerzas revolucionarias estan determinadas a derrocar a la dictadura mantenida por los Estados Unidos. El pais se encuentra al punto de una guerra civil. El gobierno norteamericano esta enviando millones de dolares en ayuda militar a la junta y ha declarado que hara todo lo posible para impedir un triunfo revolucionario.

La solidaridad internacional es particularmente importante en estos momentos en que la situacion mundial extremadamente peligrosa. Es importante que tomemos cada oportunidad para demostrar nuestra oposicion a la explotacion, opresion, e intervenciones militares por parte del imperialismo yanqui. Nostros tambien debemos demostrar nuestro apoyo a las luchas populares al rededor del mundo, las cuales nos benefician a nosotros aqui en los Estados Unidos.

El mitin publico sera en el Amherst Common y empezara a las doce del mediodia. Habran oradores, musica, y mesas con informaciones.

Hay mucho trabajo de publicidad con relacion a este evento. Para que tenga exito se necesita la ayuda de mas personas. Habra una reunion este martes a las 7 pm en el Student Union, Salon 423C (Junto al Consumer Action Center y eeeee las oficinas de SCERA.)

Mother's Day Rally

REPRESSION AND RESISTANCE IN LATIN AMERICA

This is the title of a rally which will be held in solidarity with the national liberation movements in Latin America and condemning United States support for repressive regimes

The rally will be on Saturday, May 10, which is Mother's Day in most Latin American countries. One of the focuses of the rally will be the role of women in the resistance to the U.S.-sponsored repression. In the oppressed Latin American nations, women participate in different ways in the peoples' struggles, from silent vigils (e.g. Argentina) to armed involvement (e.g. Nicaragua).

Another focus of the Mother's Day event will be the repression and resistance in El Salvador. In that Central American country the revolutionary forces are determined to overthrow the U.S.-backed dictatorship. The country is virtually in a state of civil war. The U.S. government is sending millions of dollars in military aid to the ruling junta and has stated that it will do everything in its power to keep the revolutionary forces from winning.

Internationalist solidarity is particularly important in light of the currently highly dangerous world situation. It is important to take every opportunity to demonstrate our opposition to the exploitation, oppression, plundering and war-mongering of U.S. imperialism. We must also demonstrate our support for the liberation struggles around the world which also advance our own interests here in the U.S.

The rally will be on the Amherst Commons and will start at noon. There will be speakers, music, and information tables.

There is a lot of work to be done to publicize this important event. In order for it to be successful, more people will have to help. There will be a meeting this Tuesday at 7:00 pm in the Student Union, Room 423C (Next to the Consumer Action Center and accross from the SCERA offices.)

For more information you can contact the Commuter Collective or the Office of Third World Affairs, or call 584 0914. Posters and leaflets can be picked up at one of the two offices.

Right wing terror in Bolivia

From the Guardian, April 23

Despite the vigilance of Bolivian progressives and trade unionists, the country's rightists are looking for another opportunity to seize power. Several plots within the armed forces have been reported in recent weeks.

On March 21, Jesuit journalist Luis Espinal was tortured and murdered. Espinal was the editor of Aqui magazine, noted for its antifascist positions. Observers suggested his killing was meant to test public reaction in adbance of a planned terror offensive against other leading left figures. Former Interior Minister Jorge Selum termed the killing "a sinister terrorist plot of the extreme right wing whose first act was murdering Espinal."

If the killing was meant as a test, it revealed massive popular opposition to fascist violence. Over 70,000 people attended Espinal's funeral, reportedly the largest demonstration ever held in La Paz.

Following the killing, representatives of most of Bolivia's parties-all except former dictator Hugo Banzer's Democratic Nationalist Alliance and the right-wing Bolivian Socialist Falange-met at the Bolivian Labor Confederation (COB) headquarters and called on the president to form a new cabinet and guarantee that scheduled elections be held June 29. In reponse to the meeting's declaration, all cabinet ministers resigned and President Lidia Gueiler began selecting new ministers.

The meeting also agreed to set up committees for the defense of democracy on city blocks, in factories, towns, schools, mining centers, etc. The congress, meanwhile, passed new legislation concerning the elections. A number of legislators also called for the resignation of the head of military intelligence, who they charged had covered up recent rightist terror attacks.

The strong show of support for democracy in the wake of Espinal's murder may make those plotting a coup think twice for now. Last year an attempted takeover by Col. Alberto Nantusch was defeated by militant mass opposition, led in particular by the COB

una modesta plegaria

Cada uno de nosotros mata aquello que ama", decía Oscar Wilde: . debe ser una de esas fatalidades que persiguen al hombre desde que era una ameba, y le seguirá hasta que termine el camino inverso y vuelva al charco original. El amor a la libertad de prensa nos va dejando, poco a poco, sin periódicos. 'Es por tu bien', dicen ahora con la vieja cantinela del padre represivo, completada siempre con la maldita frase 'Mas me duele a mí'. Empieza a evocar aquello escenas de la guerra del Vietnam, cuando los Estados Unidos amaban tanto al pueblo indochino hasta tal extremo que, por ayudarle, le penetraron con aviones, tanques y soldados. La Inquisición quemaba vivos por auténtica piedad.

Se nos ha educado para eso, para que lo comprendamos bien: 'Quien bien te quiere, te hará llorar'. Y la letra, ya se sabe, con sangre entra. Y con sangre sale: se les ha sacado a muchos la sangre como consecuencia de lo que escribieron. No serán los últimos.

Parece que el concepto de amor de las civilizaciones que nos aman a sus civilizados está en la fase masoquista, en la oral canibalista. Desearíamos, por favor, un poco mas de indiferencia. Se nos ha dicho que la traición empieza con el halago, que el enemigo nos acaricia antes de clavarnos el punal, que los dioses lloran antes de perdernos y que el camino del infierno esta lleno de buenas intenciones.

Nada debe temer el hombre mas que a sus salvadores. Estos freneticos de la bondad han llegado a quemar cuerpos para salvar a sus propietarios, haciendo para ello una admirable distinción entre propiedad y propietario de lo que a todas luces parecía una identidad. Tambien parecia una unidad Vietnam: lo quisieron salvar los americanos. La Historia reciente cuenta como; y los periodicos de cada día muestran la tenacidad con que los tanques sovieticos, que ya salvaron Checoslovaquia, estan salvando Afganistan. Tan fuerte es el ímpetu salvador, que les grandes naciones no temen perderse ellas mismas con tal de salvar a los demas. En realidad, su gran deseo es salvar al mundo. No vacilaran, cuando llegue el momento, en emplear arsenales nucleares capaces de destruirlo enteramente. 'Mejor que la destrucción, el fuego', decía un poema de Cernuda

La obsesión del ciudadano y del pequeño pais esta en salvarse a sí mismo, y prescindir de salvadores. No se tolera. Se nos dice que no estamos maduros para salvarnos; que somos débiles y el mal es fuerte y grande. Habita en nosotros mismos. Para los teóricos de la política, la salvacion es algo que debe practicar otro. Nos lo decian en la escuela, lo decian los antiguos padres de familia, con una frase muy concreta:'Quien bien te quiere te hara llorar'. A la que añadian un final, cuando el salvado se retorcía ante el castigo y pensaba interiormente en terribles venganzas:'Mas sufro yo'. Lo cual a todas luces era falso. La misma Iglesia pareció ceder durante un tiempo a ese ímpetu salvador: vuelve ahora, con el salvador Wojtyla a intentar salvarnos de nosotros mismos.

Hay mucha gente, sin embargo, que lo que desea es que le dejen salvarse a sí misma. Incluso perderse, dentro de la definición de perdición. Mas vale perdido, pero contento, que salvado dentro de un campo de concentracion o en una hoguera. Pero esta opcion es la que se suele condenar como el materialismo del mundo moderno. Lo que debe importar, segun parece, es la salvacion por la destrucción, por el fuego.

Va siendo hora de que aceptemos, definitivamente, la filosofía del enemigo. Por lo menos, acaba con nosotros despues de habernos cuidado, esmerado, engordado como al cerdo, aunque sea para sacarnos mas provecho; el que nos ama nos mata antes de nada.

Por favor, que nos no ame tanto Carter. Ni quisieramos que acudiese a demostrarnos su amor, que debe ser tan profundo como el que tiene a los juegos olímpicos. Que no trate de liberarnos de los sovieticos, y que los sovieticos no traten de liberarnos de los americanos. Que nos dejen en nuestro selvatismo, en nuestra incuria, en nuestro abandono, en nuestra tristeza e inopia de no bautizados por el fuego sagrado de sus liberalizaciones, de sus salvaciones. Es una modesta plegaria.

THIS SUMMER. PUT YOUR WORK WHERE YOUR HEART IS

Don't spend another summer behind the counter.

This time of year students talk about finding "meaningul work". You're graduating or just looking for summer employment between terms and you don't want to spend another summer at McDonalds. You've learned a lot and don't want to be another educated typist or knowledgeable salesperson.

Be a community organizer in Boston.

The United Farm Workers Union needs you. They are looking for community organizers this summer. You'll be trained by a national leader of the farm workers movement. You'll work with community, church and labor groups in the Boston area. Other experienced organizers will help you, and you'll be helping the farm workers win their boycott of Red Coach lettuce and gain just contracts in the fields of California.

Working with the farm workers you'll receive room and board and $10 a week (like Cesar Chavez and all organizers in the farm workers movement). It will be one of the most educational and important summers you'll ever spend. If you're interested in doing this summer what you've always talked about doing but never quite found out how to do it, or where, here's your chance. For more information call or write:

EL SALVADOR
and its Archbishop:
victims of U.S. military aid

by Western Massachusetts Latin America Solidarity Committee

The assassination in El Salvador of Archbishop Oscar Arnulfo Romero on March 24 is but one indication of the extreme terrorism and violence now rocking the small Central American nation. A recent step-up in U.S. military aid to the country's military government is playing an important and destructive role in the violent eruption.

Romero was slain by a single bullet fired by a right wing extremist, according to the New York Times (March 30), while delivering Mass in a hospital he had founded for terminally ill cancer patients. The single most influential figure in Salvadorean politics and a candidate for the Nobel Peace Prize, Archbishop Romero had used his Sunday services, broadcast on radio, to voice growing criticism of the military government and support for opposition movements of peasants and workers. "These are insurrectional times," he state recently. "The morality of the Church permits insurrection when all other paths have been exhausted." (quoted in NACLA, XIV, 2).

Soon after he died the three civilian members of El Salvador's five man Junta resigned in protest. The Junta, which seized power in a military coup last October, now consists of two army colonels, both trained in United States military academies.

Carter gives millions to pay for bloodbath

Although government forces have been linked to a surge in the number of civilians killed in the last few months, the Carter Administration is still pressuring Congress for a special military aid appropriation to the junta. Three hundred thousand dollars in U.S. military aid have already been sent, and the appropriation of another 5.7. million in military sales credits will be voted on by Congress shortly. Western Massachusetts Congressman Silvio Conte, as the ranking minority member of the House Appropriations Committee, will have a big say in whether the appropriation gets through Congress.

A few weeks before his death Archbishop Romero wrote President Carter that the U.S. military aid would lead to "a major bloodbath in this long suffering country." Romero argued that the junta and the armed forces have not demonstrated their capacity "to resolve grave national problems, They have only reverted to repressive violence, producing a total of deaths and injuries much greater than in recent military regimes."

Military governments have ruled El Salvador for the past 47 years, after a peasant rebellion in 1932 was crushed at the cost of 30,000 peasant lives. Under the successive military regimes pressing social conditions have persisted and grown. El Salvador is the smallest and most densely populated nation on the American mainland. The New York Times recently reported that 2 percent of the people own 60 percent of the land. Unemployment ranges over 30 percent. Those who are employed are promised a minimum wage of three dollars a day but often receive less, according to a report in the October 25 Boston Globe.

Several political organizations advocating social change and the overthrow of military rule emerged in the early 1970s in response to these conditions. The New York Times estimates that 100,000 people out of El Salvador's population of 4 million now belong to one of the three largest resistance groups: the People's Revolutionary Block, the Front for United Popular Action, and the People's Leagues - 28th of February.

These organizations contend that solutions to the social problems facing El Salvador can only be found if military rule is overthrown, the basic economic and power structure changed, and a new government that recognizes the needs of the majority of the people established. Their position is strongly opposed by the right wing, centering on the "Fourteen Families" (realy about 60) who have held economic and social power since 1932. These large landowners have funded and rural militia, ORDEN, which is widely understood to be responsible for the assassination of peasant leaders throughout the countryside.

In this setting of intense social conflict, the U.S. State Department has sought one primary goal for the past year: to keep the popular organizations from gaining power. Fightened by last summer's Sandinista victory in neighboring Nicaragua, the State Department has pressured the junta to undertake reforms in order to ease the social conditions propelling opposition to the regime. Simutaneously it has stepped up military training and supplies designed to strengthen the Junta wd coatrol and domestic repression capabilities.

Junta uses "land reform" against the poor

In March the government nationalized the banking system and announced a 'moderate' land reform plan. The regime promised to buy 25 percent of the country's land from the few hundred families that own more than 500 heatares and redistribute it to peasants.

According to the New York Times this program will benefit only one third of the 300,000 landless peasants over the next year. In any case, the popular resistance organizations oppose it, since the Junta plans to implement the reform without allowing participation from the three groups - indeed, while allowing its "Security Forces" to conduct a campaign of terror against their members.

As a result of these tensions, government repression of its opponenets has increased. A delegation of U.S. religious figures who visited El Salvador during the week the Archbishop was killed wrote in a letter to the New York Times theat "most of the 900 persons killed so far this yeat have been victims of the arny and other security forces..."

Thus the Carter Administration's strategy, to curb the growth of a revolutionary movement by arming the Salvadorean military while promoting selected limited reforms, is meeting only partial success. On one hand, levels of repressive inflicted by semi-official "Security Forces" have risen tragically. The reforms promised by the Junta, however, blocked by the government's basic opposition to the peasant organizations, have not borne fruit.

Archbishop Romero's fear that the Carter Administration's military aid plans will only increase repression was well founded. His death should serve to signal us that current U.S. interventions in El Salvador must be opposed by all Americans who favor a just and peace-promoting foreign policy.

The Latin America Solidarity Committee asks you to take the time to write Congressman Silvio Conte (2300 Rayburn Office Building, Washington, D.C.) to express your opposition to U.S. military "aid" to the current repressive Junta. For more information about El Salvador, attend the talk on "El Salvador - Blood Illusion" to be given by Betty Richardson Nute this Friday at 3:30pm in Campus Center 165. Nute was a member of the Ecumenical Fact-Finding Team to El Salvador, a group of five U.S. religious figures who interviewed Archbishop Romero the day before he was killed.

A Message From Cuba

To all Cuban Friendship Associations,

To all the friends of Cuba

In this moment that our people faces a new escalade of imperialist aggression with the infamous alliance of burgeois and oligarchic governments of Latin America; when within a few days our seas and even a part of our territory - the zone occupied by the naval base of the USA in Guantanamo - held by force occupied by the naval base of the USA in Guantanmo - held by force by the imperialism, will have the unpleasant presence of ships, planes, and hateful yankee marines, when all reactionary sectors and pro-imperialists raise their voice attempting to discredit the prestige and influence of the Cuban Revolution because of its profound process of political, economic, and social transformations, the Cuban Institute of Friendship with the Peoples calls upon all the friends of Cuba to support and defend the Cuban Revolution. We call upon you,

•To repeat the demonstration of solidarity of the glorious days of Playa Giron, of the October Missiles Crisis, of the struggle against the Escambray bandits; the resistance of our fishermen; the solidarity that condemned the monstrous crime of the sabotage to the plane that transported the sports delegation, in Barbados waters; the demonstrations of solidarity that during 21 years have meant an invaluable contribution for our heroic opposition against imperialism 90 miles away from our coasts.

•To condemn the hypocritical campaign directed against Cuba by the Yankee Imperialism and by the oligarchic and reactionary governments and their allies all over the world, to denounce the sinous interpretation of rights of asylum and the pretension of using it as a weapon against revolutionary Cuba and to harbour common delinquents, antisocial elements, to unmask the scheme plotted around the events that have taken place at the Embassy of Peru.

•To condemn the threatening military maneuvers that are being organized by the USA government and the Pentagon in the Caribbean with the vain pretension of frightening our people and to try to stop the revolutionary wave of Central America and the Caribbean.

•To condemn the criminal blockade against Cuba and the existence of the yankee naval base in Guatanamo that, against the will of this people, occupies a part of our territory.

We call upon all progressive men and women of the world to support the revolutionary movement of Latin America, Central America and the Caribbean, specially the heroic struggle wages by the people of Salvador against the Christian-Democratic Military Junta.

We ask for the solidarity of our friends throughout the world in this vigorous battle carried out by our people to defend its dignigty, for its sovereignty, and to put forward the historical revolutionary endeavor of building a socialist society in a free and voluntary manner.

Cuba, its people stelled in more than 100 years of struggle for its dignity and independence; that during 21 years has resisted the yankee imperialist aggression, that has given its solidarity and internationalist support to others peoples, is certain that every honest men and women of the world will be beside her in this moment of provocation and imperialist threat.

Defeat the maneuvers and the aggressive escalade of the yankee imperialism.

Defend the rights of the peoples of Latin America and all continents, for a better and more dignified life!

Che-Lumumba School
We are the Future!!!!

The Che-Lumumba School, also known as Loft II, was founded in 1972 as an alternative, Third World elementary school, serving children between the ages of five to eleven. It was created out of a growing concern felt by Third World parents at the University of Massachusetts that their children's needs were not being met by the public schools. Because Third World children were a minority in the public schools in Amherst, such questions as identity and the history of the achievements of Third World were not adequately dealt with. The curriculum of the public schools, expressed as well as hidden, often excluded and further alienated Third World children, thereby denying them a meaningful education.

With this emphasis and initiative, Loft II was begun. The school was allocated four classrooms, one storeroom office, and a bathroom on the fourth floor of the New Africa House at the University of Massachusetts, which also houses the nationally known W.E.B. Dubois Department of Afro-American Studies. The school applied for and has received accreditation from the Amherst Public School system.

Che-Lumumba is now in its eighth year. During this time, the school has had students, parents, and teachers of African, Native American, Asian, Chicano, and Puerto Rican descent. As the philosophy of the school evolved, it was felt that the make-up of the school must reflect this growth. Accordingly, in the beginning of the 1975 school year, Che-Lumumba began to accept and welcome progressive European descent families, while at the same time keeping in mind that a large majority of families and teachers involved must be of Third World background in order to maintain and develop the school's identity and goals.

Educational Program

The educational program of Che-Lumumba is geared toward the development of children who are able to think critically, analytically, and creatively in seeking alternative solutions to the problems we face in the world around us, children who possess a strong academic foundation and clear values, unafraid to question and challenge.

The curriculum of the school is multicultural in nature. The history, achievements, and struggles of peoples from all parts of the world, as well as those of Third World people in the United States, are emphasized. The history of women and of workers in this country are also a prime focus of the curriculum. In addition, current events are stressed so that the children develop an appreciation of the importance of history and of the historical process. Spanish is also studied as a further indication of the value we place on a bilingual multicultural approach to education.

The curriculum emphasizes problem-solving skills and processes. It also endeavors to instill a sense of worth and dignity and respect for others. The school studies and tries to practice the Seven Principles of the Kawaida. They are:

Umoja - Unity
Kujishagulia - Self Determination
Ujima - Collective Work and Responsibility
Ujamaa - Cooperative Economics
Nia - Purpose
Kuumba - Creativity
Imani - Faith

And, finally, the acquisition and practice of self-discipline is seen as a valuable asset in the development of children.

To summarize, the curriculum is a collective process which relies on the active and genuine participation of the children, the families at school and at home, and the community at large. It is, thus, a tool through which the children develop a strong self-identity and a commitment to change.

WHERE WE STAND

Throughout the development of Che-Lumumba, three goals have remained firmly in our minds:

1. The Necessity for a Commitment to Social Change in United States Society-

We are committed to social change -- the elimination of racism, discrimination, sexism, class privilege, and other exploitation of one human being by another. To this end we seek to develop a sense of social consciousness in our children to encourage them to join in the struggle against social injustice however and wherever it may occur.

2. The Necessity to Develop Academic Skills Which Have Been Historically Denied to Third World People-

Third World people are regularly denied the opportunity to rise above their economic position. This is accomplished throughe systemmatic denial of the skills necessary for such social ascendence. As a result, Third World people make up a significant portion of the unemployment lists, welfafe roles, prison population, and fill up the lowest paying sections of the workforce. It is one of Che-Lumumba's primary goals to counteract this tendency through the development of usable skills.

3. The Necessity to Counteract the Ethnocentric Perspective of the Public Schools-

Che-Lumumba operates from an international perspective placing emphasis on African, Hispanic, Asian, and Native American roots, which in addition to composing a sizable and the most exploited portion of the population of this country, also constitutes the majority of the peoples of the world. It is logical, then, that the school is committed to a multicultural, bilingual philosophy as vehicles leading toward ethnic and racial pride in our children coupled with their firm commitment to the struggle for the liberation of oppressed peoples everywhere.

The school attempts to instill these goals within the framework of cooperation and collective unity among students, parents, and staff. We further believe that as the children develop, so must parents and staff, not only to keep pace, but in order to set the example in action as well as words to "Serve the People."

The Che-Lumumba School operates as a collective of parents, children, and teachers who are committed to social change. The parents contribute their talents, whether as teachers, curriculum developers, administrators, or serving on committees. Tuition is charged according to the families' ability to pay. The only funds which the school receives are from tuition, fundraising events, and contributions from student and non-student groups.

(The school is looking for teachers for 1980-81 school year. All interested persons apply before May 15.) For further information, please contact:

oficials all over the nation who for one reason or another have a vested interest in upholding Maoism.

As for China's internation economic involvement, there has been a tendency to overstate its dimensions and the degree to which it is likely to shape tomorrow's China. China's foreign trade is still small, and in per capita terms staggeringly to (US$25). The main task of the Chinese economy must continue to be to produce food (from seven percent of the world's cultivated land) for its own people (22 percent of the world's population). For all the talk and anxiety about China going into debt, Beijing's policies toward borrowing are extremely cautious. The same modesty is evident in China's involvement in the international movement of persons; the total number of foreign students the PRC, with one billion people, has abroad in all countries is less than the number Hong Kong, with five million people, has in the United States alone.

In a word, only a small tip of the vast Chinese iceberg touches international waters. China's modernization will not, like South Korea's and Taiwan's and Singapore's hinge heavily on international factors.

Nor has there been any change in the hyper-nationalism and the military-mindedness of China's outlook. China has become very pro-Western, but not very internationalist, or notable devoted to a vision of a peaceful world.

There is a heavy-handed self-righteousness about China's absolutute, take-it-or-leave-it hostility toward Vietnam, which makes it very difficult even to discuss the matter with Chinese officials. If one feels that China as the much larger country should have been able to find political-diplomatic means of keeping Sino-Vietnamese tensions within bounds, there is little sign on the Chinese side of self-doubt, or of awareness of the ultimately futility of using military force to express anger toward a truculent small nationa.

China spends perhaps as much as nine percent of its GNP on defense-its military bill is much larger than West Germany's and several times larger than Japan's-which is a great deal for a backward society determined to improve quickly its standard of living. Doubts as to this priority may well grow among the Chinese. Yet for some time to come China, which has not forgotten its century of humiliation before foreign assault, is going to seem an old-fashioned nation in the absoluteness of its nationalism, in its maintenance of a siege mentality, and in its hearty confidence that wars can be fought and won. It was symptomatic that during the Sino-American summit in Washington after normalization, President Carter stresseed "peace" when analyzing the new relationship, while Vice Premier Deng Xiaoping stressed "defense."

There was an aspect of anti-war dissent to Wei Jingsheng's Vietnam clash-his passing on of casuality figures from the China-Vietnam clash to a British journalist greatly angered certain Chinese authorities. Yet in no major nation does a strong anti-war movement seem less possible than in China.

Behind this old-fashioned belief in the verities of nationalism and the acceptability of using force lies a fundamental point of social experience: despite the new cosmopolitanism of urban China, the overall gap between China and "non-China" is still relatively vast. Chinese schools do little to promote internatialist values. Marriage between a Chinese and a non-Chinese is almost unheard of. From deep within China the outside world is perceived-if at all- only as an abstraction for China to match and surpass.

The sense of identity with people of other nationalities, which is the source of any feeling of international obligation, is not very strong among the hills and rivers of China. The knitting together of peoples through direct experience of each other's way of life, which is the basis for any hope we can have for international order, is not a process in which the Chinese are to the fore.

All in all there is a dappled character to the current Chinese scene. One hears many Delphic utterances from on high. Positions are taken whose apparent implication are shield away from. Wise and even exciting policies are introduced though the justifications offered for them ("cleaning up the mess left by the Gang of Four") do not always convince. Beijing bristles with promises and good intentions, yet one senses a number of painful trade-offs just around the corner.

A key statement of basic purpose in the post-Mao era is a vow to "create a political atmosphere in which both centralism and democracy will resign, discipline and freedom, unity of purpose and a universal feeling of satisfaction and high spirits." Each pair of values embodies a contradiction; Beijing is trying to contain it, "walking on two legs" with a gingerly care that suggests at times a lack of full confidence in either leg.

Judicial organs are to be "independent;" yet also under the supervision of the Communist Party. Ultra-leftism was a disaster; but "burgeois" institutions would be just as bad. You may speak up and say what you wish; however if your views are "counterrevolutionary" you will be arrested. Skepticism is good because "blind faith" has led China into disasters; but not skepticism toward "scientific truths." The Chinese people must "emancipate their minds;" but this definitely does not mean doing things according to one's own whims." Lui Shaoqi, the former head of state who was purged in 1968, has just been rehabilitated; yet the man who purged him, Maso Tedong, will not be directly blamed for the deed. Officially it is said that contact between Chinese and foreigners is a good thing; yet some Chinese experience bullying and surveillance after mixing with foreigners.

The young Beijing resident referrred to above wrote in his letter that "Some people are beginning to question the virtues of socialism;" yet even he felt the need to back on a qualification: "not the genuine Marxist socialism." If the Chinese twins ideas of yin and yang did not exist they would need to be invented to describe

I was the representative of the Jewish community (specifically the Jewish Feminist Organization (JFO)), at international Women's Week (IWW). As the woman who organized the controversial workshop; Jewish Women in Progressive Mideast Struggles, I feel that I have a certain perspective that needs to be heard. In Suman's article, she explains many of athe events following the decision in IWW regarding the workshop. She failed to mention, though, a six page letter I wrote regarding Anti-semitisn in IWW especially regarding the decision to eliminate the workshop. Although several copies of the letter were copied and circulated througout the community, no one responded to my letter. I would like to present an edited version of it here. Because I do believe that anti-semitism is an issue in the conflicts at hard. It is important in our efforts to confront racism and anti-semitism not use one of these forms of oppression to mask the other.

An Open Letter to International Women's Week

The events of the past few weeks are troublesome and frustrating. By writing this letter I hope to be able to clear some way for dialogue and progress.

...I have a history of anto-racist work and I have been a leader in white communities, and now in the Jewish community, on fighting racism...I didn't plan to put all of my energies in IWW into fighting anti-semitism. I though that my work on Jewish Women would be additional and wouldn't raise much controversy, that maybe it would raise a few eyebrows. At the time I didn't believe that anti-semitism existed-at least not on the left or in the women's community. My naivety end there. I founf that I had to put all of my energy into fighting anti-semitism, and that, -- like a slap in the face --- year, it really did exist.

I was told that after I left the meeting Monday night (where the decision was made to eliminate the workshop), that there was consensus that everyone appreciated all that I had done, that eveyone respected me, that I shouldn't feel alienated. I hope I can draw from that respect, because I do feel alienated, and I would like to spell out why.

Before I begin I would like to offer a few aspects of anti-semitism. Later in this letter I may refer to them by number.

1. When Jews are singled out for scrutiny, unlike all other groups, this, is anti-semitism.

2. Whenever Jews do something we are expected to be 100 percent perfect.

3. The burden of proof of anti-semitism is put on our shoulders.

4. There is a failure to recognize the complexity of anti-semitism, and Jewish oppression. (We are often the oppressors and the oppressed.)

5. When Jews are invisible this is anti-semitism.

6. Jews are not supposed to be angry because anti-semitism doesn't really exist.

7.Jews have been historically divided from other opressed groups.

8. Not recognizing Jewish culture and Jewish rituals, and expecting Jews to give up our culture, is a form of cultural domination, and anti-semitism.

9. Pitting Jews against each other is a form of anti-semitism.

10. Assuming that if one Jew doesn't need or recognize a part of her culture, others don't need to, is anti-semitism.

11. Considering Jews as merely another religious groups, instead of as a cultural group, is anti-semitism.

12. Not knowing about anti-semitism, yet deciding that one is not anti-semitatic, constitutes anti-semeism. One's ignorance is no excuse. Bigotry is ignorance. Non Jews must educate themselves on anti-semetism, see number 3.

13. Assuming that Jews who are actively against anti-semetism, aren't also opposed to other forms of oppression, is also anti-semetic.

Everyonw says that they don't want me to feel alienated but often decisions were made at times that were, inconvienent to me. The meeting following the decision to eliminate the workshop was scheduled for Friday at 5:00. I was told that I should come and that I should not feel alienated. Friday night at 1:30, Shabbat begins, and given everything I was up against already, I couldn't help but feel alienated. Shabbat is a time for me to put the week, and the world behind me. It lets me reaffirm myculture and be with my people. After I explained to women that I couldn't go to a meeting at that time, for cultural reasons no attempt was made to change the meeting time, in this blatent case of cultural assumption and domination. (3) Although I had been told not to feel alienated, no attempt was made by the group, not to alienate me, I was supposed to be responsible for how the group treated me, for my own alienation. (3).

I do believe that the decision made Monday night was anti-semetic, for several reasons:

-No other workshop, or group underwent as much scrutiny. (1).
-In order for the workshop to be held, the speaker, and her politics, were expected to be perfect. (2).
-Many women made their decision or their lack of decision based on ignorance and lack of information. I had done extensive research, and had been expected to present what I knew to the group, anyone else was welcome to read anything I had or was welcome to do their own research. People didn't trust my research, wouldn't do their own, and wouldn't hear the speaker. No one else assumed responsibility for gathering information, therefore the burden of proof was placed on me. (3).
-Women decided, based on their lack of knowledge, that the speaker should not be heard, thereby making Jews, and Jewish presence in the Middle East invisible. There are Jews putting their lives on the line on this issue, yet their struggle is totally obliterated. (5).
-Making a decision on Jews, with no information on Jews, or anti-semetism, (especially on a workshop that aims specifically to give that information,) is anti-semetic. (12).
-The decision implies a refusal to accept that Jews too, are an oppressed (as well as oppressor) group. Instead of recognizing the complexety of Jewish existance, and collective struggles against oppression, a simple answer was sought. (4).
-Not allowing us a forun prevents sus from discussing our oppressions, and maintains a history that keeps us separate from other oppressed groups. (7).
-By preempting dialogue a dogma was created and the dogma was explicity anti-Jewish simply because it did not allow for anyJewish analysis, and maintained Jewish invisibility, (5).

Where to, form here?--

The events that foloowed Monday Monday's meeting were unfortunate and ugly. The meeting ar Everywomen's Center, was aimed at criticizing the IWW committee, but because of tensions and racism at Everywomen's Center and the fact that the only women there from IWW, were Third World women, the decision was taken as an attack against them. I do not doubt that the approach by Everywomen's Center may have been racist. Even if it wasn't the Third World Women and every reason to assume that it was, since as with Jews and anti-semetism, the burden of proof of racism, should not be placed on the Third World Women.

We all need to stop blaming the victims for their)our oppression, (3). Jewish anger and Third World anger has been denied all along. Our rights to "over react"-- often we are called paranoid--has to be understood and recognized. We cannot be responsible for your bigotry, and our oppression at the same time (2,3,12). You have to prove to us that what you are doing doesn't descriminate. Jewish anger has been invalidated since the beginning of IWW '80, when I first got angry and yelled, and until the decision to cancel the workshop. (6). It is denied every time someone reminds me of racism, assuming that I forgot, merely because I remind them of anti-semetism, (13).

Racism is of utmost concern to me. Anti-semetism does not seem to be of concern to IWW.

I don't believe that anyone really "hates Jews." But I do believe that Anti-semetism is just another "ism" that people don't want to confront. When racism was first presented to me as an internal problem, I didn't want to deal with it, and I believe that this is the case with anti-semetism, as well.

The next few weeks will determine much of the future of progressive struggle in the valley. I believe in coalitions and solidarity. This is why I have stayed so long with, and so patiently explained my position to a group of women, who didn't begin, and still don't accept most of what I have to say about my people. But in the past few years I have seen this community grow, and I believe that we can change. Racism and anti-sememtism are so entrenched in our common culture. Conflicts such as these are surfacing all over come to some clarity and laugh together. Dialogue is necessary on these issues. This is why I wanted to bring the speaker to IWW. We have to come to these dialogues with patience, honesty and the willingness to change. I mean me,--I mean all of us. We also have to understand each other's anger and hear through it.

IRAN

controlled by the U.S. monopolies, the Iranian working class has acquired a fantastic revolutionary potential.

III-The democratic character of the state. A future socialist Iran must be a democratic society.

Unfortunately the leadership of the Iranian revolution has not been radical enough to lead the revolution through the socialist stage.

The Ayatullah Khomeini's role as in many other cases of anti-imperialist revolutions (like Nasser in Egypt) has been ambiguous. On the one hand he vouches for a anti-imperialist line or even progressive measures in the favor of the lower classes and against capitalist relations (e.g. Khomenini has nationalized the banks). On the other hand he is supporting conservative pro-capitalist forces.

The "power bloc" which is exerting influence over the new government in Iran consists of many heterogeneous elements: 1. Khomeini who is oscillating between the masses and the "revolutionary" council, 2. The "revolutionary" council which is influenced essentially by the Iranian capitalists and therefore supports compromise with the U.S. in all the conflicts e.g. in the issue of the take over of the embassy, Bani Sadr a member of the revolutionary council was supporting the IMMEDIATE release of the hostage. He also ordered the removing of all the socialist groups from the Iranian campuses. The "revolutionary" council consists mainly of conservative clergy men, and pro-capitalist "nationalists". ●

CCEBS FAMILY DAY

On April 26 CCEBS (The Committee for the Collegiate Education of Black Students) held its fifth family day and it was a date to remember. On that day CCEBS was able to give recognition to the many brothers and sisters who were able to show significant achievement at this institute of higher education, University of Massachusetts. The day was celebrated with an informal get-together and a slide show, which was then followed by a luncheon. Following the luncheon, awards were handed out to the aspiring young students by their academic advisors. Dr. Carol Carter, Director of CCEBS, then gave a tribute to the class of 1980. She spoke of the problems of the "real world" which they will be facing in the very near future. This presentation was followed by a session of poetry and music as performed by students. All in all, the CCEBS family day was one of joy, as family and friends were able to come together and show their respect and pride for the talent which is so overflowing in our small community at UMass Amherst. ● the present hospitality toward thesis and antithesis alike.

The Politburo seems determined to maintain a knife-edge balance. Is it out of a wise prudence, taking into account both the hopes and the limits of future possibilities; or is it a sign that incompatibles are wrestling beneath the surface of Chinese politics

The prospects for political stability hinge on many factors, including the performance of the economy, how fast the social tensions of modernity develop and how much longer Deng stays fit and alive. Perhaps the most important clue, though, comes from an accurate explanation of the changes in China during the late 1970s.

One explanation is the official Chinese line that the Gang of Four held "a portion of the power" for "about a decade," and that now they have fallen and so ultra-leftism is dead, and things are better. There is some truth in this analysis, but not the whole truth. The Gang was a cohesive force only briefly; Mao's wife and her Shanghai associates were not the giant-killers in the 1960s that it is now convenient to say they were the giant-killers in the 1960s that is is now convenient to say they were; above all they owed their "portion of the power" to Mao and all fell within weeks of Mao's death. The Gang of Four was not an independent force for every long if at all.

Or it can be asserted that the politics of this vast land of one billion people are subject to a law of swing of the pendulum. There was the steady period of the First Five Years Plan; the Great Leap Forward; a retreat to moderate policies in the early 1960s; the utopian lunge into the Cultural Revoiltion; a return to pragmatism after 1969; and so on. It is true that there is in China-as in many other countires-a structural tendency to zig-zag between innovation and consolidation. Yet each burst of leftist assertiveness in the PRC's history can be traced to the will of the man Mao Zedong. If people as mediocre as one or two of the Gang of Four could capture "a portion of the power" one may well expect extremists to do this repeatedly. If there is a law of swing of the pendulum, then today's pragmatism will bring on tomorrow's ideologiacal zeal.

But the real explanantion for the changes in China over recent years is the absence of Mao. After the great helmmsman died, certain pressures that had been building up for years found fulfillment: pressures for an end to patriarchalism; for some intellectual experimentation free from the inhibiting shadow of a political figure who came to monopolize the mental space of the nation; for a more serious focus on economic task, instead of endless political hoopla; for more relaxed dealings with the international marketplace of products and ideas.

A permanent change has occured, a shift, irreversible I believe for years, in the direction of the demythologizing of politics. So in the upper reaches of the political system, at least, the prospects for a steady period are good.

Conflicts there will be. There are still wisps of ultra-leftism even at senior level-voices which mention "class enemies," talk a lot about the dictatorship of the proletariat, facts" with the milder "use practice as the criterion to measure truth"-and even when philosophical differences do not arise there are differences about how to allocate resources, or how to slice up the pie of production.

Yet the conflicts will not be handled as morality plays in the style of the late Mao. No single figure today embodies both doctrine (jiao) and power (zheng) as Mao, the revolution's architect, did; the two drift apart and a leader may lose power without it having to be said that he has lost truth as well. During 1978 and 1979 the Poliburo has shown a readiness to live with differences, and to see them in single-issue terms, rather than as an encounter between darkness and light.

The way the legacy of Mao himmself is being handled sets the tone. He is still honored; yet almost all of his large initaitives from the late 1950s until his death have been gently deplored. "Chairman Mao's Policy Has Come Back" was the headline on a recent article that reported the dismantling of Mao's rural policies of limiting private plots and private markets. Many fone policies are now said to have been "undermined during the Cultural Revolution." To say by the Cultural Revolution, which would be more candid, would point a finger at Mao; "during" allows the convenient inference that the Gang of Four made a mess of Mao's basically sound Cultural Revoltution.

All this creates a disturbing gap between what is said and the implications of what is said, and into[illegible] strains may result. Perhaps Chinese political culture can no longer sustain ritual and indirection in its time-honored was. Perhaps the years 1976-79 were only a Chinese equivalent to the years 1953-56 in Russia, a prelude to a coming vicious dethronement. I doubt it. The Chinese way in these matters, for all the recent changes, is not the same as the Soviety way. Nor does China have a Lenin (and Marx) of the Chinese Revolution, is probably an indispensable symbol of the PRV's legitimacy.

In Chinese conditions, the double policy of praising Mao while burying him seems a better solution than sudden root-and-branch denunciation. Partial criticism (Deng has said Mao was 70 percent right and 30 percent wrong) works to prevent the kind of bottling up of resentment that occured in the Soviet Union from 1953 until 1956, and it minmizes the chances of a pro-Mao backlask by Mao loyalists.

The near future will neccessarily bring a resoltuion of some policy issues which now sit on a knife-edge. How much inequality will Beijing allow-between a worker and his boss, between city wages and those in the surrounding countryside, between levels in prosperous Manchuria and those in a poor province like Shanxi? Now that class struggle is said to be a thing of the past, when will the slippery, ultimately class-derived term "counter-revolutionary" behavior under the rule, not of ideology, but of law? In every sphere of Chinese life there are such issues, which will soon have to be clarified by reference not merely to the settled, comfortable myths of tof a receding past but to new realities.

An acid test for "socialist legality" will be whether the members of the Gang of Four are accorded due process, despite the passions their case arouses and the political usefulness of caricaturing them as the incarnation of evil, when their trial takes place soon. It is not a good sign that a senior judge, after assuring a visitor of the regained independence of China's judicial organs, answered a question about the trial of the ultra-leftist quartet (which he expects to take place during 1980) by saying that "the disposition of the Gang of Four case will really be up to the Party leaders."

And the year 1980 may well reveal whether Deng can really remain the drving force without the top Party and state posts; or whether Hua, given structural realities and the deeply ingrained habit of rural Chinese to think of politics in terms of a leader-be he emperor or chairman to think of politics in terms of a leader-be he emperor of chairman-may rapidly show that a paper tiger can turn into a real tiger. There were signs during 1979 that Hua was grown in nature, though Deng's associates continue to rise on all sides of Hua in the upper reaches of the Communist Party hierarchy.

The prospects for the urban dissident movement are excellent so far as survival goes, but poor for success in bringing about basic change in China's political system. Mao's passing makes patriarchal ways unpopular and hard to defend. Part of the government is happiy to see a bold vanguard pushing for more "socialist legality." And a social development-the rise of a quasi-middle class (based on access to knowledge rather than on relation to property)-is the root cause of the dissident movement. So we have as yet probably seen only the beginning of political dissent in China.

On the other hand, the dissident movement inevitable comes into conflict with even the most liberal-minded members of the Politiburo. When Deng calls the dissidents "anarchists," we are reminded that he himself is an authoritarian. The Vice Premier is not so much opposed to Mao's arbitrarian that he favors an independent judiciary and full equality before the law, or is prepared to forfeit the reserve weapon of calling troublemakers "counterrevolutionaries," much less to dismantle the one-party system. Moreover, modernization in some respects requires more discipline, law and order, and centralization than China knew under Mao.

In the excitement of Beijing's liberalizations, one should recall that many of the measures are no more than a return to the legal, economic and political policies of the 1950s, and that the 1950s saw China set in place large portions of the Stalinist system. Above all, the "Democracy Wall" phenomenon is limited in being an urban growth in a nation of peasants. China cannot have a political system-I suppose it would not be "democratic" for it to do so-tailored only to the desires of an aspiring urban middle class, which is far removed from the earthbound 80 percent who till the fields.

The voices of those who seek to go "too far" toward demoncracy, and away from one-party dictatorship, will go on being heard; "Democracy Wall" is more modest in 1980 than it was, and it has been moved out of Beijing's heart, but it still exists. But those voices are likely to be heeded only when one part of the Politiburo finds them useful as a weapon against a more conservative part. And only their "centrist," constitutionalist demands seem likely to have any success; not their "extreme," democratic demands. ●

A Tribute to Water

Have you every gone into an eating establishment and asked for a glass of water with your food instead of the usual soda, milk, and were made to fell like you were being cheap, stingy, and a down right nuisance. Well I have, and I am sure many of you have also. If you are one of those people who always order the usual you wouldn't be aware of what I am talking about.

Well this weeks column is dedicated to that life giving substance that most of us take for granted, and that substance is water. Many of you may wonder why I choose to dedicate this weeks column to water. My reasons are simple. I want you to sit back and think of the last time you had a glass of water, and I don't mean, just to take an aspirin or some other pill or because the thermometer hit 80? yesterday. Most of you won't even be able to remember, and why is that? Well most of us would rather have soda, coffee milk or alcoholic beverages instead of water. Who wants water, it's boring, it's blah, it's ordinary, it's free and it's always there.

Let me tell you something, that boring ordinary substance called water could do you a lot of good, if only given a chance.

There are very few agents that possess as many remedial properties as water. One of water's most important properties is its powerful cleansing effect. No application can equal water in efficiency and certainty of action. Water will work wonders, and unfortunatly it's use has been terribly neglected to the great detriment of the human race.

There is not one drug in existence that will decrease the temperature of the body as quickly and efficiently as water. The pulse can be reduced from forty to twenty beats in a few minutes by the use of a cool or cold bath.

A large majority of diseases are caused because of obstruction in the various organs. Usually the obstruction is the accumulation of natural waste materials, such as ones obsorbed in hard water and indigestible foods. Water used internally will remove internal obstruction because it is the best solvent that we have.

In fevers, cholera, etc., the blood is usually abnormally thick, which causes difficult circulation and the tissues do not obtain nourishment. There is positively nothing but water that can remedy this condiction.

When our cars get dirty we clean them with water just as we would our clothes, our dishes and our bodies. Did you know that everytime we take in a glass of fresh pure water we make three organs extremly happy. Those organs are our kidneys, liver, and intestines. Everything that passes through our systems must go through them first and the only way they have of purifying themselves is through water.

From the day we are born until we breath lifes last breath these organ works over time cleansing and purfying our system. You could say that they protect us from ourselves, for without them we would soon die. I want you to use your imagination for a moment and think of a sponge. Now take that sponge and wet it enough to take the hardness out. Now that the sponge is wet lets put it to work cleaning up chocolate syrup, after a short while the sponge gets sticky and saturated with syrup. So naturally we rinse it out with water and start again.

Our kidneys work just like sponges only instead of rinsing them out with water we usually rinse them out with soda, coffee, milk, juices, and alcoholic beverages, and that doesn't make one bit of since. I am not saying give up these beverages I am only saying why not even out the score every once in awhile, and give your organs a break. The human body requires at least six 8oz of water a day. More is better, depending upon the kind of foods eaten. Cool water is good but ice water is completely out. Babies should be given water just as they are given food.

When one drinks an abundance of pure, fresh water the blood and tissues are bathed and purified, thereby being cleansed of all poisons and waste matter. Water is also an essential constituent of the tissue cells and all body fluids, such as digestive juices etc.

Water dissolves nutritive material in the course of digestion, so that it can be absorbed into the blood, which carries it to various parts of the body to repair and remove waste. Water keeps all mucous membranes of the body soft and prevents friction of their surface, as well as regulating body temperature, and body processes.

I know when I said six glasses of water a day I turned most of you off. You might say I don't have time to drink six glasses of water a day or if I drank six glasses of water a day I would find myself running to the toilet every minute. Well you have more time than you think. On the average we are awake and active 14 to 16 hours a day. So if we drank a glass of water every 3 hours you would match our daily requirement without problem.

If you are drinking and adaquate amount of water your urine will only have a hint of yellow color to it, and after six glasses by the end of the day your urine will probably be as clear as the water you put into your mouth. Now that doesn't mean drinking it all at one time.

I must warn you of some possible side effects that will take place after a period of time. You may meet some new and interesting people on your way to the bathroom. Your complextion will properly improve tremedously, and your eyes will be brighter. You may forget to use your deordorant and not even notice it, as well as waking up with sweeter breath in the morning.

Well now that you no the inside story on water what are you going to do about it. If you care at all about your body you may run to the facet now and pour yourself up a glass. After all we owe our bodies a celebration, they do so much that we take for granted and ask so little in return. So be good to yourself drink those six 8oz of water a day the appreciation your body shows in return will amaze you.

There will be an open forum concerning the lighting issue at the University of Massachusetts on Tuesday April 22nd, 1980 a 4pm in room 101 in the campus center. Chancellor Koffler has been invited to attend. There will also be four panelists representing the following groups: The Everywoman's Center, SCERA The Women's Issues Team, The Office of Third World Affairs, SCERA The Anti-Racism Team, Women's Studies and Hillel.

Last Tuesday, the Chancellor presented SCERA, UMass and the community his latest proposal for increased lighting on campus. Chancellor Koffler's outline adequately deals with some of SCERA's necessary demands, but there are more areas on campus that are too poorly lit for the safety of students. Chancellor Koffler has also neglected to address students' concerns for educating our community. We need educational programs that deal with the root problems of violence. We have shown Chancellor Koffler that we as concerned, and tuition-paying students will not be silenced, until our demands are met, ALL OF THEM. Chancellor Koffler has been invited to an open forum around the issue, to answer all our questions.

If the Chancellor chair is empty on Tuesday night, he will have made his position clear. He will have shown to us how important the issue of lighting on campus is to him. For more information please contact: The Women's Issues Team, SCERA, 545;0341. ●

Kathak

Of the four principal schools of Indian classical dancing KATHAK is North India's very own.

It traces its origin to the dim past of Indian heritage whence it had been evolved as a means of conveying a 'KATHAK' - a story illustrated with an expressive gesture-language and choreographic pantomime. The story-teller was the KATHAK and hence the typical name of this dance.

Unlike the other principal dance forms, which were completely shielded from outside influences, Kathak had been repeatedly exposed to powerful alien customs and interferences, being slowly stripped of its spiritual significance.

Renaissance had to await the advent of great masters like Shree Kalka Prasad and the famous Shree Bindadin Maharja, whom not only culled the best from the mass of accumulated material but codified it systematically and enriched it with many an original contribution.

Once restored to its ancient spiritual level, Kathal has reemerged with all its grace, nuance and flexibility to suit contemporary needs for artistic expression and understanding.

SHAMA BHATA and PRANATI PRATAP, most promising amongst the Kathak dancers of today, have received rigorous training for a good number of years under smt. Rohini Bhate and also have benefitted by the valuable guidance of Shree Suresh Talwalkar in the aspect of 'layakari.'

Shama has been the recepient of the National Scholarship in dance, and has received her master's degree in dance. Pranati was awarded the prestigious scholarship of the Bhulabhai Memorial Institute, Bombay. She too has a master's degree in dance.

Shama and Pnaati were part of India's cultural delegation to Sri-Lanka in January 1975. Both these artists have won kudos for their exquisite on the intricacies in their art form, especially their 'layakari' and 'tatkar' which is immensely enjoyable. Their abhinaya is subtle and has a wide range, they convey all the delicate nuances of expression in their explication.

Like all other disciplines, Kathak imposes a rigid framework with which radical innovation is difficult. Yet Shama and Pranati have tried to use new conceptual forms in their dance. Here the idea of 'Tribhangaparyaya * Awarta' need to be mentioned.

Shama and Pranati have staged various experimental ballets through which they have tried to interprete new themes. Their sensitive interpretation of 'seagull' was widely applauded and their choreographic compositions in the abstract impressionistic ballet 'Colours' was hailed as a step in the creative experimentation with in the dance form.

Shama and Pranati though highly individualistic in their own ways, create together, each compliments the other in every way. They create and dance in harmony and each gesture, intricate 'layakari' and nuance of expression is exquisitely and subtly counter-pointed by the other. What is remarkable is the way they establish an immediate rapport with their audience-the layman and the connoisseur alike. The sensitivity of their mutual response communicates itself to the audience and together they weave a magic web of grace, rhythm and movement.

Smt. Rohini Bhate, the famous exponent is a disciple of the Late guru Lacchhumaharaj and Pt Mohanrao Kalianpurkar. Being the Founder-Director of NRITYABHARATI KATHAK ACADEMY, Rohini Bhate has trained many a pupil excellently in the Classical Kathak discipline. Though steeped in tradition, she has evolved a highly sensitive and gracefull style of her own, has imparted it effectively to her pupils, which makes their Kathak recitals unique in conception, planning and presentation.

A writer in her own right, Rohinin has written books relating to the art of dancing, created music to her own choregraphy and has composed many solo and group munbers, as a also full fledged ballets in the classical Kathak style. Her own Kathak recitals have been appreciated for their intense expressiveness in India as well as in U.S.A., Europe, China and Shri-Lanka. Rohini Bhate's work has been publicly acknowledged in the form of a State Award for the year 1976-77.

Shama * PRANATI, the inimitable and lively DANCING DUO ably represent the essence of Rohini's dedication, experience and deep understanding of the Kathak medium. NRITYABHARATI KATHAK ACADEMY, the premier Dance Institution in Poona was founded and established in the year 1947; committed to give the most authentic instruction in Kathak, to aspiring students. The academy has turned our a good number of fulfledged Kathak dancers amongst whom SHAMA * PRANATI are the most outstanding ●

Aid cutbacks hurt UMass

By MARC FAGELSON
Collegian Staff

Among President Jimmy Carter's proposed budget cuts is a 37 percent reduction of the National Direct Student Loan program's funding, which, if passed by Congress, would remove 162,000 students nationwide from eligibility in the program.

UMass Director of Financial Aide Ed Apodaca said the cuts will put a greater strain on basic campus aid. UMass/Amherst was expecting a 15 percent increase in their funding aid for next year, but if the cuts are enacted, the program will lose $4 to $5 million of its original 1980-1981 $35 million budget, he said.

The proposed cuts will have a "dramatic impact on low income students," Apodaca said. The Middle Income Student Assistance Act gave the University a 15 percent increase this year, but that extra funding will be nullified by the cuts, he said.

Sixty percent of the 6,852 students on the DSL program at UMass will be affected by the cuts, he said.

The cuts will prevent the University from making revisions in student's requests for additional funds once the year has started, Apodaca said. Students will have to submit financial aide forms early to get aid because there may not be enought money for everyone, he said.

As alternatives to federal loans, students will need bank loans or participation in work-study programs to make up the difference for their school bills, Apodaca said.

"We're hoping to change the proposal by contacting congressmen to make them aware of the impacts of the cuts," Apodaca said.

The Bureau of Student Financial Affairs is writing a letter to students affected by the legislation, to inform them of the cuts and how they can battle the proposal, he added.

Joel Packer, assistant director of government relations for the National Association of State Universities and Land Grant Colleges, said yesterday that the $108 million cut will make getting a loan more difficult for all students, but that lower income students will suffer most from the legislation.

In addition to the DSL cut, $50 less per student will be available for students who receive a Basic Education Opportunity Grant, Packer said: 2.6 million students receive the BEOG grants and all BEOG students would be affected by the cut.

Andrew Young lauds Carter; criticizes hostage mission

By SEAN HARVEY
Collegian Staff

Former United States representative to the United Nations Andrew Young told about 1500 people in the Fine Arts Center last night that American foreign policy has produced more positive results than negative in the past three years.

Young said that with the signing of the Panama Canal Peace Treaty in 1978 the Carter administration started to repair relationships abroad.

"That was the litmus test," Young said. "We can anticipate more progress if we keep up our present policies."

Young also mentioned the Camp David Accords, which are attempting to negotiate peace between Israel and the Palestinians on the West Bank.

One place where American foreign policy has not met with great success, Young said, is in relations with the Soviet Union.

"The Russians have always interpreted anything we did as trying to undermine them," Young said. He also said if strategic Arms Limitations Talks with the Russians had been successful we would now have increased trade and better relations with the Soviet Union.

Young criticized President Carter's decision to attempt a rescue of the hostages in Iran, saying this is a case in which doing nothing may be safest thing.

"I said from the beginning that there was no military solution to this problem," he said.

Young is not a supporter of President Carter's boycott of the Moscow Olympics, saying the Olympics are designed to give the opportunity to free the world of political and military rivalries.

"I don't think we'll gain nearly as much by staying away than if we go," he said.

Young said the U.S. has reached a point where it has to admit the limits of military power. He cited as an example a few years ago when Moslems took over the B'nai Brith building in Washington and military power could do nothing.

"Eventually three Arab ambassadors managed to talk the Moslems out," Young said.

In regard to Secretary of State Cyrus Vance's rsignation yesterday, Young said the nation will deeply regret the resignation of a high-principled man. He said he understands why Vance resigned.

Young is supporting President Carter for re-election because the advantages of an incumbent against Ronald REagan are too much to throw away.

Connecticut Governor Ella Grasso

Conn.restores studies funds

By BRIAN O'CONNELL
Collegian Staff

Connecticut Governor Ella Grasso last Friday overruled a proposed budget cut that would have eliminated the Regional Studies Program appropriating the needed $120,000 to fulfill Connecticut's obligation toward the program, New England Board of Higher Education program co-ordinator Betty Berrini said yesterday.

Grasso, however told NEBHE officials over the weekend that Connecticut "would pull out of the program in two years," Berrini said.

The program, which is sponsored by NEBHE, enables students from any of the New England State universities to pay in-state rates at a school offering their major if their home-state does not.

218 Connecticut residents are enrolled at UMass under the program.

According to Berrini, Connecticut legislators had decided last week not to appropriate moneys for the program, slashing the $120,000 earmarked for the program from the state budget. If the cut had remained in the budget, Berrini said, Connecticut residents enrolled at UMass under the program would no longer be eligible to pay the in-state $650 per semester tuition they have paid in the past. Instead, these students would be forced to pay the $2,500 out-of-state tuition starting next fall, she said.

Berrini told the Collegian that many Connecticut residents, both students and concerned parents, had "bombarded" the Conn. State House, after reading newspaper accounts of the proposed budget cut last week. "The governor was simply responding to all the calls," made by "concerned" Connecticut residents, Berrini said, adding "especially to the large number of UMass students and parents of students from Connecticut who contacted the state house."

Vance resignation

Opposed mission as too risky

By BARRY SCHWEID
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Secretary of State Cyrus R. Vance, apparently kept in the dark about a decisive White House meeting, resigned yesterday in a public clash with President Carter about the aborted hostage rescue mission in Iran.

An administration official who requested anonymity told The Associated Press that Vance had no idea Carter intended to consult with other key advisers about the rescue operation at a National Security Council meeting on Friday, April 11.

Vance was on a brief Florida vacation. He returned after the weekend and registered his dissent at a second council session April 15. By then, according to this account, Carter had virtually decided to approve the operation.

Vance quietly submitted his resignation to Carter last Monday, before the rescue attempt failed in an Iranian desert Thursday night because of equipment failures and other mishaps. Eight American commandos were killed in an air collision and their bodies were left behind.

Sources said Vance was so upset by the decision that he would have left even had it succeeded.

The administration official said the Defense Department planned the operation with almost no margin for error. To succeed, he said, everything had to go right.

The White House released an exchange of hand-written letters between Carter and Vance that barely touched on the disagreement. Still, it was an extraordinary disclosure of differences between a president and one of his principal advisers.

Vance's departure prompted speculation about other resignations within the administration. Defense Secretary Harold Brown, who supported the rescue operation, denied he planned to resign. So did State Department spokesman Hodding Carter, assistant secretary of state for public affairs; Patt Derian, assistant secretary for human rights, and Richard Holbrooke, assistant secretary for Far Eastern affairs.

Carter, visiting wounded rescue mission survivors at an Air Force hospital in Texas, was asked by reporters whether Vance's resignation would harm negotiations with Iran. "His departure did not have any adverse effect on the rescue of American hostages, nor will it in the future," the president replied. He called Vance "a fine and dedicated man" who had served the nation well.

Former Secretary of State Cyrus Vance

On Capitol Hill, many members of Congress expressed regrets over Vance's resignation. Senate Republican Leader Ted Stevens called Vance "the calming factor in the administration," and Sen. Claiborne Pell, D-R.I., said it "could mean a more strident foreign policy and a less steady one."

The president's letter acknowledged that Vance was quitting "as a matter of principle." Vance told the president he had taken the decision "with a heavy heart."

Neither letter explained the scope of the disagreement, but administration sources said Vance considered the operation too risky.

Jody Powell, the White House press secretary, said Carter "expressed his inclination to move forward with the rescue operation" at the NSC meeting April 11.

Before the operation was undertaken, Powell said, Vance had several "extensive conversations" with the president and voiced his objections.

IRAN

Allies stand firm on sanctions

By ARTHUR L. GAVSHON
AP Diplomatic Correspondent

LUXEMBOURG — Western European leaders yesterday renewed their threat to impose economic sanctions against Iran on May 17 unless "decisive progress" is made toward freeing the 53 American hostages. They also called for new U.N. efforts to try to win the captives' release.

The nine-nation Common Market ended a two-day summit pledging solidarity with "the government and people of the United States in their present time of trial."

The expressions for support came despite displeasure over the aborted U.S. rescue attempt in Iran and the resignation yesterday of Secretary of State Cyrus R. Vance, who opposed the mission.

Privately, diplomats interviewed at the conference remained puzzled and unsure of Washington's future intentions in the aftermath of Friday's mission. They also voiced their belief that the Americans, deliberately or not, had seriously misled them about the military operation.

The European declaration urged U.N. Secretary-General Kurt Waldheim to renew his efforts to gain freedom for the hostages, who spent their 177th day in captivity yesterday. Visits to Tehran by Waldheim and a U.N. investigative commission earlier this year ended in failure.

The Common Market leaders also called on Islamic and other Third World nations to press the Soviet Union again to withdraw its troops from Afghanistan. They said the central Asian country should be made neutral and free of outside interference.

Soviet troops moved into Afghanistan in late December to replace one pro-Moscow government with another. They stayed to help the Kabul government try to quell a rebellion by Moslem insurgents

Talk in the corridors of the conference hall yesterday was about the resignation of Vance, who won many admirers among his European counterparts over the years. Many of them said his departure was another setback for President Carter.

Carter visits burned soldiers

President Jimmy Carter waves as he leaves Brooke Army Medical Center, San Antonio yesterday visiting four servicemen hospitalized there for injuries received in the aborted rescue mission in Iran.

By GREG THOMPSON
Associated Press

SAN ANTONIO, Texas — President Carter, breaking the self-imposed isolation that has kept him in Washington or Camp David for months, traveled to Texas yesterday and donned a surgical mask and gown to visit men injured in last week's ill-fated attempt to rescue the American hostages in Iran.

"Our nation owes them a great debt of appreciation, gratitude, respect and admiration," Carter said after seeing the five injured men. "I am overwhelmed with emotion when I look at them and speak to them."

The president was greeted by cheering and applauding crowds as he visited first Wilford Hall, a medical facility at Lackland Air Force Base where the deposed Shah of Iran was hospitalized last year, and then the Brooke Army Medical Center.

Carter walked grim-faced past the crowds. At Brooke, he wore a surgical mask and white gown as he talked to the four men being treated for burns suffered when two aircraft collided and exploded on a remote Iranian airfield after the rescue mission had been aborted.

Col. Basil Pruitt, commander of the hospital's burn unit, said it was not a lighthearted visit but a friendly one. He said Carter shook hands with two of the men but could not with the other two because they were burned too badly.

More than one way to falsify a transcript

By JACK GALLAGHER
Collegian Staff

If you wanted to manufacture a false student transcript, there would be two avenues open to you.

You could try to change actual grades on computer terminals in the Registrar's Office in Whitmore. Or you could try changing a copy of the grades, which would be found in the Records Office in Whitmore.

Neither is very likely, though, for various reasons.

You would run into problems in the Records Office. You could make a copy of the transcript but its validity would be doubtful. There are two kinds of documents you could manufacture: a copy of a transcript and an official transcript.

A copy of the transcript would not be run through the Registrar's "validating" machine, while the official transcript would be run through the machine. Only six or eight people —none of whom are students— are authorized to use the validating machine, says Registrar Ralph Jones. And the machine is only unlocked when the official validating people are using it, Jones says.

Asked whether it was likely that transcripts could be validated by anyone other than those six or eight people, Jones replied that it was "remote."

Twenty-four full-time, four professional and 25 or 30 students on work study are employed in the Registrar's Office

But, if you wanted to change the actual grades on the University computer, you wouldn't have an easy time, either. You would need clearance to get on a terminal in the Registrar's Office. And if you did change a grade in the system, you would probably be caught anyway.

Clearance on a day-to-day basis is determined by Jones' office, says Marty Smith, acting data processing director in Whitmore. Once on the system, a series of security checks could stop you from doing what you wanted anyway.

Smith says there is also a way of checking how many and on what files changes have been made. Asked whether any such checks had been made recently, Smith replied: "No comment."

No specific computer-language knowledge is needed to get on the system, though, Smith says.

Other officials contacted would not comment on any of the details surrounding the Hampshire-Franklin District Attorney's Office's investigation into transcript falsifying. The D.A.'s office announced Friday that it had apparently uncovered such a scheme "in its inception," but released no other information of its investigation.

Harsh look at Irish struggle

By ELIZABETH HERMANCE
Collegian Staff

Margaretta D'Arcy, leading Irish playwright and activist in support of Irish political prisoners, and leading member of Irish Women Against Imperialism, was the featured speaker at the Campus Center last night.

Sponsored by the Irish Solidarity Committee of Amherst, D'Arcy spoke about her role in Northern Ireland's struggle to free itself from Britain's influence. D'Arcy's prime concern is to bring to the United States an awareness of the problems confronting Northern Ireland today. She repeatedly stressed the "great silence" prevelant in this country today. This silence concerns the treatment of Northern Islanders by the British.

"The British have failed to recognize that there is a war going on in Northern Ireland," said D'Arcy. "There is no war, only extremist elements." D'Arcy stated that the British claim that they "have no political prisoners, only criminals."

D'Arcy is one of these "criminals." She has been arrested five times in the past year for supporting Irish P.O.W.s and she spoke last night of the treatment she received. Under the Prevention of Terrorism Act, D'Arcy was arrested and held in the Armad Jail. According to this act, which was passed in 1976, any person can be held without access to a lawyer for 7 days, if police feel that the suspect is involved in terrorist activities.

D'Arcy said of the act "the Prevention of Terrorism Act had had a terrible effect on the people of Ireland. The act is not really to prevent the I.R.A. from coming into England and planting bombs or other destructive activities but to supress what is really occurring."

Spring Concert

Tickets for this year's annual Spring Concert, scheduled for May 10 in Alumni Stadium, will continue to be sold for the remainder of this week outside the third floor of the Campus Center.

Peter Keenan, Union Program Council ticked coordinator, said students whose names did not appear on lists to receive the tickets should obtain a clearance card from the Registrar in Whitmore stating they are a student. These students should then return to the Campus Center Thursday or Friday to receive their tickets.

Census

Blank census forms are still kicking around campus.

"Thousands" of them are still unreturned, says Jerry Grady, community relations coordinator. So thousands of the forms were distributed —again— yesterday in the hope that they will be returned Wednesday.

There's no way out. One way or another, the census takers will get the information —if not by mail, in person. If you received a form yesterday, fill it out and drop it in the campus mail —and you won't hear from the census for another four years.

Grady speculates that one of the reasons for unreturned forms is financial disclosure. But all information disclosed is kept in strict confidence, he says.

The 1980 census is totally unrelated to the Internal Revenue Service.

Benb and Gerald ride again in Steve Lafler's new comic book

By ROB HUFFMAN
Collegian Staff

Caution: Prolonged exposure to the comics of Steve Lafler can lead to unnatural impulses, strange urges, and an overt affinity for pies of every description. Hard core fans have been known to adorn their heads with aluminum foil and shout incoherently.

If you are presently a student at the University of Massachusetts in Amherst, however, the chances are good that you've already been exposed to the likes of Benb, Gerald, the Onion men, and Professor Dirge. If this is the case, then you next step should to be find a copy of Benb and Gerald, Steve's recently published collection of his best comic strips.

Culled from almost 500 strips printed in the Collegian over eight semesters, this is clearly the book for all foil fans. For the first time, the zany exploits of Steve's crazy characters can be followed all at once, without having to wait for tomorrow's newspaper. Also included are 5 strips that were never printed by the Collegian (only true foil freaks will be able to figure out which ones they are).

Here indeed is a book that belongs on your shelf — —right between Art Linkletter's Kids Say the Darndest Things and Kliban in a Box. Steve's unique appraoch to humor— —a cross between Spiderman, Walt Disney and Cheech and Chong, has been a staple of campus life for four years.

As he explains in the introduction to Benb and Gerald, Steve is an advance scout/sabotage agent sent to Earth from the planet Sloink. He is also trying to make a name for himself on the national level, and has already been published in Rolling Stone's College Papers, Creative Computing, and currently is "trying like hell to get into National Lampoon."

Much of the success of "Aluminum Foil" and "Aluminum Ghost" was the way in which Steve's bizarre, often drug-crazed sense of humor lent itself to an institution where the bricks are falling off of one library, and where students walk into the other and read a sign saying "you are on the fifth floor." The problems that perplex us mortals, however, are effectively dealt with by Lafler's characters. Unable to cash a personal check, for instance, Benb merely fries a Whitmore cashier with his magic eyes; confronted with the nefarious Onion men, Benb used his Benb copter's rotors to slice them into onion rings.

A must for communes, dorm rooms and Mother's Day gifts, Benb and Gerald is 100 pages long, and printed on high-quality (better than comic book) paper. It's available for only $3.50 at For the Record in Amherst, Main Street records in Northampton, the University Store, and directly from Steve at: 66 North Maple Street, Hadley, Mass. 01035.

'WISE' women learn about solar energy issue

By ANN FARIS
Collegian Staff

Solar energy is no longer a science of the future. Today a home heating system harnessing the sun's energy can be installed for as little as $1,500. As the development of and comsumer demand for this alternative energy source expands, so does the need to educate the public about its application.

This is one of the goals of Women in Solar Energy (WISE), according to Leslie Hill, the Solar Program Director of the Cooperative Extension Energy Education Center at UMass and one of the coordinators of WISE. In a Collegian interview last week, Hill stressed the need to involve the community, particularly women, in the growing area of solar technology.

"Solar energy is a diverse field composed of specific interest areas which have been historically dominated by men; such as science, math, construction, and engineering," Hill said. "The field needs to make a commitment to drawing women into it and soliciting their support."

WISE will offer its first workshops during the week of October 19-26, when the New England Solar Energy Association will host the Fifth National Passive Solar Conference at UMass.

Since the conference is a professional meeting of experts in the field of passive solar energy, WISE's program will not be held until the final days of it. Yet, Hill notes, WISE will be able to utilize many of the resources made availavle at the symposium. WISE's participation in this event is being sponsored by the New England Solar Energy Association and the Extension Energy Education Center.

Workshops will focus on issues facing women who are interested in solar energy from both a professional and consumer standpoint. According to Hill, the estimated 750 women expected to attend the program will leave with, "conceptual and technical solar knowledge, confidence and a feeling of support from the solar community, hands-on practical experience, and an action agenda to take home and implement in their community."

Female interns to help with planning and design of the fall conference are already being recruited. "Anyone who wants to learn about solar should feel very non-threatened, and is invited, no matter what their income, experience, or socio-economic status is," Hill said.

The UMass Student Handicap Collective sponsored the performance "SIGN ME IN" last night in room 101 in the Campus Center. Thomas McGrath conquers a set of imaginary barbells and then snaps his suspenders in self pride, in the photo top set, while some of the cast perform in the opening number. According to a spokesman for the group, the performance tries to portray some problems of the handicapped, especially of the deaf.

Anti-social Darwinism

EVERETT HARMAN

In 1975 the book "Sociobiology: The New Syntheses" by Edward O. Wilson repopularized the concept that human behavior and values are largely determined by genes. According to the theory, behavioral tendencies are inherited from one's ancestors along with such obvious traits as eye color, skin tone and height. In accordance with Darwin's theory of evolution, those genes producing behavior which enhances an organi sm's chances for survival are passed on more readily than those that do not.

Sociobiology is an old tenet under a new name. In the mid-1800's, Count Arthur de Gobineau published "Essay on the Inequality of Human Races" in which he attributed problems in society to inherited racial traits. Since then, the theory has been revived numerous times, most notably by the Nazis who made racial theory a cornerstone of their ideology, and who used it to justify some of the most heinous crimes in the history of humanity.

Whether or not there is any truth in the concept that behavioral tendencies are inherited, it is certain that the idea has been used by individuals who seek to promote the concept of human inequality. It is unfortunate that there exists today in Europe a "New Right" which includes the Club de l'Horloge in France and the National Front in Britain, the latter of which has managed to get some members elected to positions in local government.

Both groups are openly racist but have found that the demagoguery of an Adolph Hitler is not as effective at the present time as a quiet, calm, pseudo-intellectual approach. They rely heavily in their publications on the statements of E.O. Wilson, Arthur Jensen and William Schockley, American proponents of sociobiology.

The following excerpts from an article by Richard Verral in the March, 1979 issue of Spearhead, a magazine published by the British National Front, illustrate how the "New Right" utilizes sociobiology to support it's notions of race, sex and class:

"...we racialists declare that man and society are the creation of his biological nature. We insist...that genetic inheritance determines inequality."

"One only has to observe the degree to which male dominance and female passivity in sexual courtship obtains in the animal world, likewise qualities of male aggression and female domesticity, to understand their fundamental biological basis. Such observations quickly demonstrate that 'feminist' talk of sexual roles being conditioned by society itself is the most puerile Marxist rubbish.

"We all know that differences between the races in the capacity for rational thought are explained by inherited differences in the physical structure of the brain. Behavior...also varies among races due to genetic variablity developed during their evolution."

"...the competitive instinct has a direct influence upon one particular social structure, namely class stratification, separating the bright, talented leadership group. Social classes are consequently genetic groupings."

"...prejudices...are essential parts of the evolutionary machinery which Nature employed throughout eons of time to secure the separation of man into permanent groups and thus to attain the production of new and improved races of Mankind."

What a bunch of crap—the most puerile sociobiological rubbish! The fact is that evidence for sociobiological principles as applied to human beings is virtually nil. We have shown an enormous capacity to adopt our behavior to changing needs. One of the most important reasons for the success of the human animal is our great flexibility, which allows us to function within a broad range of environments and circumstances.

Certainly we have instincts for self-preservation, language and reproduction, but to say that sex-roles, race-prejudice and class distinction are genetically determined is a flight of fancy by individuals who enjoy the sense of power and notoriety they receive from explaining human behavior in simplistic terms. Let us have the insight to see through such specious line of thought.

Letters

Patriotic criticism

To the Editor:

We write in response to Kevin F. Giblin's and Richard B. Steele's letter to the editor, and to all those faced with the immediate prospect of the draft. We would like to approach this issue from a more humane, realistic, and intelligent perspective.

Giblin and Steele state "I can't believe there are Americans who actually say that Afghanistan is none of our business." We do...believe. They claim Vietnam was a "mistake." Come on. That's just stupid. Vietnam was no more of a mistake than the American military-industrial system that put us there. One is the logical extension of the other. Afghanistan is Russia's Vietnam. Are you condemning the U.S.? In Vietnam we were not fighting for Democracy we were fighting for U.S. capitalist interests.

Giblin and Steele also state that registration would be in the best interest of America and that registration is not an invitation to war. Then they cite other irrelevant foreign peacetime draft systems. Well we're in the United States. The U.S. has never had a registration without a draft nor a draft without a war. Then they say "If draft is a prelude to war then...the world would continually be at war. Well pickup a newspaper sometime, it is.

It upsets us to hear of people like you following this country so blindly and ignorantly. They say, "If my country calls me to fight for it I will, and I'd hope all Americans would if it became necessary. What would have happened if no one wanted to fight during WWII?" Well, for one thing the German people would not have fought for "their country."

We have no intention of killing anyone for "our country." We grew up thinking killing another human being was wrong, and before we kill anyone we are going to be damn sure that it is absolutely necessary and not economically motivated. We would have fought Hitler. We would not have fought in Vietnam and we will not fight in Afghanistan.

We love our country, not our oil companies. And because we love our country we have no intention of letting it start WWIII.

Attempting to jazz it up

To the Editor—

Having just read Julie Eagle's review of the Chuck Mangione concert, which appeared in the April 25th Collegian, I am compelled to react with strong sentiment. Ms. Eagle's report was grossly innacurate and very poorly written. Rather than correct her errors, I would like to offer my review of the concert. As a music student and Mangione enthusiast of more than six years, I feel fairly well qualified to voice my opinions.

Mangione chose a very well balanced program. The emphasis was on his more recent compositions, playing all cuts from the "Fun and Games" album. After opening with "Hot Consuelo," "XIth Commandment" allowed a glimpse of the talents of Charles Meeks (bass) and James Bradley, Jr. (percussion). "Chase the Clouds Away," from Chuck's first A&M album, put Chris Vadala in the spotlight, exuding warmth in the lyric flute and piccolo lines.

"I Never Missed Someone Before" allowed the diversity of the quartet to show through. Chuck shifted to the piano, and Charles Meeks played some impressvie harmonica passages. The audience also heard solo work by guitarist Carl Lockett who replaces Grant Geissman. "Pina Colada" featured some exciting scat singing between Mangione and the members of the quartet.

The second half of the concert concluded the music from "Fun and Games." "Land of Make Believe," written in 1972, was as strong as ever, allowing plenty of room for improvisation. The highlight of the concert for me came toward the end. Hearing Charles Meeks sing the "Children of Sanchez Overture" was a treat. Meeks rather imposing in appearance, sang with such emotion, strength and beauty one became almost entranced.

The concert conluded with "Feels So Good," responsible in part for Mangione's current popularity. Following a standing ovation, came the encore, "Mainsqueeze." This piece allowed the members of the quartet one final solo. In the case of Carl Lockett, this became an opportunity to break into some improvisation. I had been concerned that Lockett lacked solo talent. His brief improvisation made me believe he does indeed have potential. Time alone will tell if Lockett can live up to the group's high standards.

The Mangione concert was an evening of outstanding jazz, showing once again that Chuck Mangione is a man who loves his music. His exuberance was almost childlike at times. Mangione's performance, along with that of his quartet was of the highest quality, with audience support throughout. Mangione is a truly gifted musician whose inspiration, one can only hope, will never cease.

On Judaic studies

To the Editor—

In the 4/16 issue of the Collegian Mr. Yitzak Santis expressed dissatisfaction with the University Administration for not establishing a Judaic Studies Department here at UMass.

Mr. Santis states that if a Judaic Studies Department were instituted then "...studies on Jewish oppression would be offered. The demand for these courses increases each semester as the enrollment in the few courses Judaic Studies has to offer grows."

I would like to inform Mr. Santis that a course on Jewish oppression already exists at this university, offered by the Political Science Deptartment, entitled "Political Anti-Semitism." The course is taught by one of the finest professors at this universtv, Professor Edward Feit.

I don't know if it was lack of publicity or a poor scheduling time which can caccount for the small enrollment; there are only six students in the class. If this course is to continue, and I believe it should, then sufficient interest in its continuance should be conveyed to the Political Science Department.

He's disconcerted

To the Editor:

I'd like to respond to Ed Levine's article (4/14) regarding the low sales of Spring Concert tickets. I'm sure this has nothing to do with the policy of allowing 3,500 overnight guests for the concert weekend. All students agree with this policy; we really didn't want to share that weekend with our friends from home! The people who get the one guest are also happy because it's a pain having more than one person impose upon your living quarters. It really doesn't matter that the one guest we're permitted has to drive anywhere from one to ten hours alone to come to the concert. Also, I'm sure that the 3,500 overnight guests will easily finance the concert.

G. Q.'s disco coming to UMass

The economy is faltering, international tensions are growing, hard times seem to be heading our way! But all of the day to day problems fade away when G.Q. hits the stage. Their sleek sound provides a soothing escape for all who listen. Rahiem LeBlanc, of New York's South Bronx, sets his emotions free and lets them soar to the crowd through his guitar and vocals. Keith "Sabu" Crier on bass and Keyboard player Herb Lane augment Rahiem's melodic compositon as drummer Paul Service strokes out the band's heartbeat.

The band G.Q., now with Arista Records, has one of the hottest disco records in the country, "Disco Nights." Aside form a distinctive version of the recent smash "Boogie Oogie Oogie," and "I Love You," a tender tribute to Billy Stewart, the late R & B star to whom their album is dedicated, all the songs were composed by the band, with lyrics by Rahiem. Producing the album with Beau Ray Fleming was Jimmy Simpson, brother of Valerie, whose recording credentials include recent LPs by Candi Staton, Ashford and Simpson, Linda Clifford and Deodato.

The unique G.Q. instrumentation, the scope of styles that the songs cover, the band's professionalism and versatility, all point to a career that won't be confined to the fads of the dance floor. G.Q. is a quartet whose performing skills indicate that they would be a solid hit in any musical era.

UPC Productions will present G.Q., on Saturday, May 3 in the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall at UMass. Opening for G.Q. will be Arista recording artists Breakwater. Tickets are now available at the Fine Arts Center Box Office, TIX and Union Records Unlimited at UMass, and Platterpus in Northampton.

Tickets are $7.50, $7, and $6.50 for UMass students, and $8.50, $8, $7.50 for General Public.

'Now You See It, Finally': Musicomedy in fourth version

By GERRY ATRICK
Special to the Collegian

If you haven't seen it, this is your last chance. On May 1,3,6 a highly trained team of comedians will make its final assault on the innocent and defenseless.

"Now You See It, Finally" is the fourth and last music/comedy revue by Peter Tolan and his ruthless comrades. Tolan, who is soon to be deported to Minnesota, has led past attacks on Southwest, ex-Chancellor Bromery, and the Lake Placid Olympics among other hapless targets.

Tolan hints that victims of this, his final offensive, will include the Oscars and the U.S. Census as well as the "Other Four" colleges. In addition, he promised to impose punitive sanctions on Hollywood; including parodies of "All That Jazz," "Jesus Christ Superstar," and "West Side Story." Tolan asserts that even this list is only a small sample of his show's resolve to entertain. Ninety percent of the show will consist of new material, with the remainder composed of the best of the last three revues. Tolan threatens, "If you don't come to this one, I swear to God I'll do another one."

The multi-talented Tolan, who claims his best talent is "breeding goats for the stage," has written, directed, and performed in each revue. Cast members also include singers from the University Chorale, as well as performers from UMass Music Theater Guild productions of "A Funny Thing Happened On The Way to the Forum" and "Applause" and, of course, past revues. All performers have been certified insane.

Response to announcements of this final revue has been mixed. Most of those polled indicated they were glad to see one more revue slated.

Performances are May 1 & 3 in the Hampden Theater Southwest and May 6 in the Student Union Ballroom. All performances are at 8 p.m. Tickets are $2 and will be available at the door.

Child care opportunities sparse in Amherst

By KAREN PARTRIDGE
Special to the Collegian

Finding adequate child care in the Amherst area is a problem for many University women. The UMass Child Care System includes five day care centers, family day care, baby-sitting referrals, and referrals to other area child care services, according to Elizabeth Perkins, child care coordinator at the Child CAre Office in Berkshire House.

The day care centers presently serve 135 families· however, there are long waiting lists for most programs, Perkins said. The university currently spends around $200,000 a year on child care services for the UMass community, she said.

According to Perkins, there has been a ten percent budget cut for child care services this year. This coupled with rising costs, will force cuts in some services, she said.

Day care centers in the areas include the Grassroots Cooperative School, the North Village Childrens Center, and the University Day School. There is also the New World Day School, which offers a multi-cultural program and the Infant Care Experiental Center, which offers services for infants. Rates vary, depending on the center, whether the child needs half- or full-day care, and whether the parents participate in the co-op programs available.

There are also many University women who can't afford adequate child care. The Poor Women's Task Force of Everywoman's Center is attempting to address this problem. Kathleen Moran, the Child care Coordinator for the program, said that the P.W.T.F. is undertaking a needs assessment survey of University women to determine what services are needed.

P.W.T.F. is presently working of establishing a full-time drop-in center at Everywoman's Center. Currently, they have a drop-in center Monday-Thursday, 5:30-9:30 p.m., for women seeking counseling or attending workshops at Everywoman's Center.

Women with further questions concerning child care are invited to call Elizabeth Perkins, at 5-1566.

Local agencies striving to help abused children

By DEBBIE ROBERTI
Collegian Staff

Child abuse has become an increasingly horrifying problem in the United States. A study by the U.S. National Commission on the International Year of the Child stated that approximately one million youths are victims of child abuse and neglect.

"Child abuse exists in all income brackets," said Brenda McCormick, social worker at the Child Abuse and Neglect Center in Springfield. "Welfare children are reported as victims of abuse more often because they are in constant contact with the Welfare Department, but child abuse affects children from upper class families also, usually in the form of physical and mental neglect."

If the parent is proved unfit...then court action is taken to remove the child from his torment."

The Child Abuse and Neglect Center relies on a group of professionals consisting of doctors, police, teachers, and social workers to refer all possible cases of abuse to the Center. They also rely on neighbors and concerned individuals to report suspicions of child abuse, McCormick said.

In each case, the referrals go through a screening committee to determine if there is enough evidence of child abuse. Then the case is given to a social worker who visits the family and decides whether or not service is necessary.

"This process take approximately eight weeks." McCormick said. "If the parent is proved unfit, and cannot provide care and protection for a child, then court action is taken to remove the child from his torment."

The Massachusetts Society Prevention of Cruelty to Children, located in Northampton, is a private agency that works with the Children's Protective Service agency to evaluate possible cases of child abuse.

"If a family has been accused of child abuse, then our primary concern is the seriousness of the case and the child's possible danger," said the Supervising Social Worker, Mary McGee.

The agency proceeds with investigation and interviews, working with the Children's Protective Service in Northampton. "We first take into account the age of the child, the family situation, and the availability of relatives who want to help," McGee said.

Various other organizations in Northampton that deal with child abuse are Help For Children and the Children's Emergency Service.

Correction

In yesterday's "Raitt sings against nukes" story, Bonnie Raitt was quoted as calling MUSE (Musicians for Safe Energy) hedonistic. Her actual quote was that musicians are "usually hedonistic," not MUSE.

Also, in "SCANN holds DC meeting" the conferees conceded that in order to build a broad-based and effective anti-nuclear movement, students must work both within and without the system.

'Red Ryder': Impressively realistic

By SUSAN RING
Collegian Staff

The set of Amherst College's production of "When You Comin Back Red Ryder?" is impressively realistic; as is the play itself. A detailed replica of a diner in Southern New Mexico, the scenery was loaned to the Troupe by the Holyoke Equipment Co., Inc. All of the play's action takes place inside the diner. The only missing element, as my companion pointed out, was the smell of food being cooked.

Michael Lennon's high-charged performance as Teddy, a bright young man whose experiences in Viet Nam and the harsh realities of his time have caused to run amuck, sets a fast pace for the play, which is set in the late sixties. Marooned in the diner while waiting for a part for his broken-down van Teddy finds a way to amuse himself and to replenish his funds. As Teddy holds a diverse group of people in the diner hostage, he exercises total control over the attention of the audience as well. His presence grips one's interest tightly as he follows one outrageous action, and or remark, with another. He's a perceptive man, with a cutting wit. Zeroing in on the main weakness of each character, he tears away their dignity along with their masks. Traumatic as the experience is, being forced to acknowledge their true selves seems to benefit at least two of the characters—the short order cook/waiter, Red, and the stuffy violin-toting tourist, Clarisse.

Lennon, as Teddy, is the sharpest of the cast. At times his crazed laugh seems a bit forced, but on the whole his performance is superb. Lisa Winston as Teddy's girlfriend Cheryl hasn't many lines or much enthusiasm for the role. Tina Volz is delightful as the icy violinist who cares more for her instrument than her husband. She is at the same time repulsed and intrigued by Teddy. Peter R. Hoar, as Clarisse's husband Richard, presents his wealthy, appearance-oriented character well.

Mark A. Davis does a fine job with the role of Lyle, the elderly man who runs the town's service station and hotel. His character, who has been handicapped by a stroke, is a generous man and a regular customer at the diner. Leslie Rae Ross is Angel, the plump waitress who spends her free time with her mother and grandmother, or watching television with Lyle. She is convincing as the good natured, naive young woman who, Teddy predicts, will die a spinster.

Angel's co-worker, Stephen "Red" Ryder, is played by Whit Wales, who does a fair job with a difficult role. Red looks to the past for a hero and finds one in Red Ryder, who was evidently a Lone Ranger type character, but as Teddy notes, different in that he was "more of a man and had less of a mind." Red's ambition is to leave the diner and the town. Wales puts a good deal of effort into the role, but didn't seems as comfortable with it as he might be.

Scott Salzman overplays his very minor role as the slave-driving owner of the diner.

The language of the play is quite explicit, as are scenes which confront the sexual hang ups of the characters. This all fits within the context of facing reality and has a justifiably place in the play.

Packers, the Los Angeles Rams, the New York Giants, the Atlanta Falcons, and the Denver Broncos. "The Kansas City Chiefs sent me a shirt with my name on the back but I haven't really heard from them much," Vitiello added.

If the 22-year old is not drafted in one of the twelve rounds of drafting that will take place in the next two days, he and an agent would "look out for possibilities, especially teams we feel need a kicker, and contact those teams in hopes of getting a tryout," Vitiello explained. This free agent route though, would have several disadvantages compared to being drafted.

"First, there is a difference in the money you would get as a free agent as opposed to being a draft pick. But more importantly, as a free agent you are not given as much of a chance to make the team as if you are drafted by the team," Vitiello said. "They won't give you much of a look."

NFL teams have been in touch with UMass players Steve LeMay (New England Patriots) and Cliff Pedrow (Giants).

Susienka wins NE golf title

UMass freshman Marlene Susienka shot a two-day 167 to take the individual championship at the New England Women's Intercollegiate Golf championship hold Sunday and yesterday at the Hickory Ridge Country Club in Amherst. Defending champion Monica Romano of Amherst finished second with a 168.

Amherst College won the competition, which featured 29 golfers from eight schools, with a team total of 735. UMass finished second with a 764, and Mt. Holyoke College was third with an 834.

Amherst's Terry Cunningham won the net championship with a 137.

Aulenback, Collins star

Mittmen sweep Friars, 3-2, 5-0

By DAVE BRADLEY
Collegian Staff

Jim Aulenback stung a triple with the bases loaded in the first game and pitcher Chris Collins spaced out seven hits in as many innings in the second game as the UMass baseball team swept a doubleheader from Providence College, 3–2, 5–0 yesterday on Earl Lorden Field.

It was a miserable afternoon to play baseball, drizzly and raw, and the weather might have affected first game pitcher Mark Brown's accuracy. The junior hurler let one run in on wild pitches and another score cross as a result of line drives to the outfield in the middle innings.

Brown retired the first six batters he faced but got into trouble in the third. The second batter of the inning reached on a fielder's choice (the leadoff batter walked), stole second, went to third on a passed ball and scored on another passed ball. The second Friar run came in the fourth inning when right fielder George Susce singled, then scored on a line double to left field by John Tierney.

UMass hitters were frustrated through the first four innings by Friar pitcher Paul Langfield, who threw four strikeouts and got several Minutemen to pop up. But Langfield's magic wore off in the top of the fifth. Doug Aylward (two for two in the first game, four for six on the afternoon) was struck by a pitch to lead off the inning, and after Langfield walked the next man he faced, an error by the Friar short stop loaded the bases with no outs. Langfield was replaced in favor of Charles Lembo but that didn't bother the next hitter. Aulenback. The DH laced a 3–1 fastball ("Best pitch I've seen all year") into right-center field and by the time the relay got to the infield, Aulenback was on third and UMass had the game, 3–2.

Brown had more control problems in the sixth (three walks and a passed ball loaded the bases) before he settled down to end the inning and the game. Brown's record is now 4–4.

"He's pitched in lousy weather," coach Dick Bergquist said after the game. "His shoulder did tighten up some but he said he was alright."

In the second game UMass really didn't need more than their first two batters to win, thanks to the shutout performance by Collins. Aylward opened the game with a double to left and scored the winning run when he crossed the plate onn a single by Mark Litano. Litano scored when short-stop Vin Bonanno walked with the bases loaded.

UMass scored again twice in the fourth. First baseman Warren McReddie lead off the inning with an awesome shot over the center field wall to the right of the 375-foot mark. McReddie, who also gave a sterling performance in the field, wasted five foul balls before blasting his drive into the wind.

"I was just trying to stay alive, make contact," McReddie said of his first homer of the year, "and he gave me a fastball. It brings your confidence up one hundred percent."

Minuteman Dean Bennett scored UMass' fourth run after reaching first on an error, stealing second, making third on a ball hit in the infield, and coming home on a passed ball.

Moser: The law giver

Moser's Law of Spectator Sports: Exciting plays occur only while you are watching the scoreboard or out buying a hot dog.

This law is just one of the derivatives of Murphy's Law—"If anything can go wrong, it will" — which explain those frustrating, aggravating, and unavoidable times when nothing goes right. These derivatives can be found in two volumes compiled by one Arthur Bloch.

One volume contains a section entitled "Sportsmanship-manship," the body of Murphology dealing with sports participation and spectating. Here are some other samples in addition to Moser's Law from that section:

Murray's Rules of the Arena:

1) Nothing is ever so bad it can't be made worse by firing the coach.

2) The wrong quarterback is the one that's in there.

3) Whatever can go to New York, will.

Knox's Principle of Star Quality: Whenever a superstar is traded to your favorite team, he fades. Whenever your team trades away a useless no-name, he immediately rises to stardom. Thomas' Law: The one who least wants to play is the one who will win.

And so on. We at UMass are, if anything more susceptible to Murphy's Law. Athletic participants and spectators alike find themselves running up against certain recurring phenomena in the area that can be explained only be concerning oneself with Murphy's Law.

Pickett's Principle: It will rain at any sporting event at Alumni Stadium to which you do not bring an umbrella. Corollary: Bringing an umbrella to make it sunny doesn't work.

Boyden's Law of Pick-up Basketball:

1) When shooting for teams, you can't win. You will always get stuck on the losing team.

Example #1: If you make the free throw, your team will have the ball hog who thinks he's Julius Erving, George Gervin, and Earl Monroe all rolled into one.

Example #2: If you miss the free throw, your team will consist of two guys wearing track shoes and no socks, one wearing black socks and a watch, and one midget.

2) The day you decide not to bring your ball to the gym will be the day no one brings a ball.

3) The more psyched you are to play, the greater the likelihood that either no one is playing or there's a full-court game on each court with ten guys waiting at each one.

Corollary: When you finally do get in a game, a pair of badminton players will be given priority on your court. Wilson's Dilemma: Any recruit considering your school will choose another school. That school will play against your school and the recruit will win the game singlehandedly.

Corollary: The recruit that does choose your school is always cheating against your side.

Waldron's Rule of Refereeing: The intramural official is always cheating against your side.

Corollary: The good officials are always officiating the game next to yours.

These laws are but a sampling of what members of the UMass community have to deal with everyday. Even I have been the victim of my own law, Cooperman's Law of Column Writing: Anything that seems funny to you will not be funny to anyone else.

Vitiello can't wait for the draft

By STEVE COOPERMAN
Collegian Staff

While many UMass students fear being drafted and are searching for legal and illegal ways out, senior Sandro Vitiello can hardly wait until he finds out whether or not he is drafted.

No, Vitiello is not a hawk, but by tomorrow he might be a Falcon. Today is the first day of the National Football League's annual draft of college seniors, and the Long Island native is one of a couple of UMass football players hoping to be selected.

Vitiello completed his UMass football career last fall, compiling impressive statistics in his two years here. The placekicker transferred from Nassau (N.Y.) Community College and entered UMass as a junior for the 1978-1979 school year. He was a key performer for a Minuteman team that went to the Division 1-AA national finals before losing to the Rattlers of Florida A&M, setting records for most field goals in one season and most extra points in addition to tying the record for longest field goal (52 yards). His output last fall made him the all-time leading kicker in UMass history.

"Right now it looks pretty good that I'll be drafted, but I have no idea in what round or by what team," Vitiello said.

According to Vitiello, several NFL teams have already been in contact with him including the Green Bay

Earl Lorden: a tradition of great baseball at UMass

Lorden Field, located behind Stockbridge Farm, may be just another baseball diamond to some people but to those who know namesake Earl Lorden it is a monument to a tradition of great baseball at the University of Massachusetts.

During the 1940s and '50s Earl Lorden was UMass baseball. He was the coach of the Redmen, a team he led to the New England world series in 1954 and to a runnerup position three more times during the fifties.

"UMass has always had good baseball, even back when it was Mass Aggie" according to "The Earl." His own baseball career goes back to when he played for the University of New Hampshire and a year on a New England League farm club.

Lorden, 83, began his coaching career with football and baseball in the 1920's when he took a teaching job at Turners Falls High School. In 1942 his Turners Falls' baseball squad beat Arlington for the state championship. A few years later he came to UMass as an assistant athletic director. "I coached baseball and helped out with the football team," he said.

"We used to play on old Alumni Field, which is where Whitmore stands now," he said. "There was no fall baseball back then because the football bleachers took up the whole field." Alumni Stadium was completed in 1965.

According to Lorden "the eastern Massachusetts players didn't start coming to UMass until around 1945, once the school became a university.

We recruited, but not to the extent that we offered scholarships."

"A few" of his players made their way to the pros "Eddie Connolly from Pittsfield pitched briefly for the Red Sox and Bob Pedigree from Greenfield played for Cleveland. But it was tough for a kid to break into the pros back then," he added.

About the threatened professional baseball strike, Lorden said, "I don't think much of it. The owners let salaries get out of hand; I don't blame the players for trying to get what they can."

After his retirement in 1966, Earl Lorden was named to the College Baseball Coaches' Hall of Fame. In 1968 UMass named the varsity baseball field in his honor. He grinned and said "They had to name it something, didn't they?"

Officials delay SGA budget

By JIM MORAN
Collegian Staff

Student Government Association Co-President Richard Moran last night said the "irresponsibility" of Vice-Chancellor for Student Affairs Dennis L. Madson would leave the Student Senate with a $36,000 unbalanced budget for fiscal year 1981.

Moran said Madson and his budgetary liason for student group funding, Acting Director of Student Activities O.C. "Bobby" Daniels, have been "procrastinating" by failing to meet the December 14 deadline for submission of the Recognized Student Organization office budget. Moran said Madson gave the Senate an estimate figure of $312,000 for administrative and personnel costs of the RSO business unit, up from the $276,000 figure allocated in the fiscal year 1980 budget.

Moran said the $312,000 estimate conflicts with figures submitted by the accounting firm of Arthur Anderson, which indicates Student Activities could operate sufficiently with $251,000 – down $61,000 from Madson's estimate and $25,000 from the 1980 fiscal year allotment.

Contacted by telephone at his home last evening, Madson explained the reason for the delay: "Under the University accounting system, we would like to see provisions made for some flexibility on accounts." Madson said he would like to see a rapid reporting system developed so that accurate, up-to-date financial statuses on RSO groups may be obtained without the approximate two month delay now incurred.

Madson also said he would want such a system to provide checks on deficit spending by student groups, and without "indiscriminately laying off employees" of the Student Activities arm of Student Affairs. Madson said a solution to personnel termination might be transferral of employee payroll funds to another office.

SGA leader Moran said he feels the proposed estimate for personnel costs is "excessive." "RSO groups and student-run cooperatives might benefit more from those funds," Moran said.

Student Senate Budget Committee Chairman Bari Njiiri said last night he received a handwritten list of employees names, written in pencil from Daniels. "But we have received no itemized proposal in writing, and Daniels told us he would have a budget prepared over intersession." Njiiri said this demonstrated a failure of the budgetary process. "This shows there are larger issues involved here surrounding who has responsibility for the process of development."

Currently, Madson has final signature power after he submits Student Activities figures to the Senate, who then make a final recommendation before again being intercepted, by Madson prior to submission to the Board of Trustees of the University.

A scheme to falsify student transcripts which may involve one or more UMass students is still being investigated, but no one has been charged or arrested, according to Hampshire-Franklin District Attorney Thomas Simons, who is handling the case for the state.

It has been confirmed that Stephen B. Taylor, a Registrar's Office employee, is the student under investigation at this time.

The Springfield Union reported yesterday that records have been uncovered showing that Taylor, who is scheduled to graduate from UMass in May, received two degrees from the University in 1979, both with high honors. In addition, the Union reported that office supplies were found in Taylor's apartment which include 50 envelopes bearing the UMass record office return address, rubber stamps, and student profile work sheets.

Although reluctant to comment on the case, United States Attorney George Kelly said that "the story appears to be accurate."

Other names besides Taylor's appear on the affidavit — a document which is necessary to the obtainment of a search warrant — that was issued by the United States Magistrate. "But it doesn't mean that those people have done anything wrong," said Kelly, adding, "they've been cooperative."

The affidavit was filed at U.S. District Court by the postal officials, after they had been contacted by someone from the UMass Police Department. Postal Inspectors have jurisdiction on a case when there is a possibility that the mails are being used as part of a fraudulent scheme, according to Postal Inspector Carroll.

Carter names Muskie

Liberal Maine senator to replace Vance

By TOM RAUM
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON [AP] — President Carter yesterday said he will nominate Sen. Edmund S. Muskie of Maine to succeed Cyrus R. Vance as secretary of state, congressional sources said.

Muskie, considered a liberal, is chairman of the Senate Budget Committee, a member of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee and was the Democratic vice presidential candidate in 1968.

Senate sources said the choice of Muskie, highly respected on Capitol Hill, virtually assured that the nomination would be confirmed.

An influential Senate aide, who asked that he not be named, called the president's decision "politically astute" and "a wise choice."

Vance resigned on Monday, citing his disagreement with Carter's decision to send a military rescue team into Iran in an ill-fated effort to free the American hostages held in Tehran since last November.

Muskie, 66, first came to national prominence when Sen. Hubert H. Humphrey chose him as the vice presidential candidate on the 1968 Democratic Party ticket. Humphrey and Muskie lost to Richard M. Nixon.

A former governor of Maine and also a state legislator, Muskie was elected to the Senate in 1958.

He ran for the Democratic presidential nomination in 1972. As a means of gathering foreign expertise, Muskie toured Israel, Egypt, the Soviet Union and West Germany. In Russia he talked with Soviet Premier Alexei Kosygin and said he found him "completely cordial and frank."

In February 1979 Muskie visited Poland as Carter's envoy and met with Polish leader Edward Gierek for talks on economic matters and the SALT II arms treaty. In that same trip, he visited West Germany, Portugal, Spain and Belgium.

Muskie, 6-foot-4, often has been called "Lincolnesque" because of his height, lean figure and craggy face.

He was born in Rumford, Maine, March 28, 1914, the son of a Polish immigrant. His father, a tailor, had been named Marciszewski, but immigration officials shortened the name to Muskie and it became official when his father became a citizen.

President defends Iran rescue failure

By JEFF BAKER
Collegian Staff

President Jimmy Carter told a crowded White House news conference last night that "the failure to try a rescue mission would have been worse than a failure to succeed."

In his opening statement, delivered in a terse, clipped tone, Carter somberly praised the American soldiers who had lost their lives in the aborted rescue attempt, saying he could imagine no higher compliment than that the men had "done their duty." Carter said that when he visited those soldiers burned in the desert plane crash: "any sacrifice we made here at home melted away when I saw their faces." The burned soldiers were apparently unanimous in their gratitude and honor at being chosen for the mission and their "desire to try again."

Carter then lashed out at the public display and desecration by Iranian authorities of the eight Americans killed in the rescue attempt. Speaking of the "ghoulish, horrible action" which aroused his "disgust and contempt" Carter said the action "showed the kind of people we're dealing with." Noting that the desecration was supervised by a member of the Iranian Revolutionary Council, Carter said other Iranian leaders were planning to have the American bodies transferred to a neutral country before being shipped home to their families.

Adroitly avoiding aggressive questioning from the press, Carter refused to expand on either the specific nature of the rescue mission or the reasons for Cyrus Vance's dissent, which led to his resignation as Secretary of State. Carter called "errorous" reports that National Security Advisor Zbigniew Brzezinski exercised undue influence in foreign policy, saying "I think I have the proper balance of advisors."

Carter denied being "preoccupied" with the hostage situation to the exclusion of other national matters, coolly ticking off a list of problems he has dealt with since the embassy seizure.

Action in Iran

Iran plane met by US fighters

By The Associated Press

Two carrier-based U.S. fighter jets intercepted an Iranian patrol plane over the vital Gulf of Oman and "escorted" it back to Iranian air space yesterday, the Pentagon said. Iran claimed the American jets "started to shoot" at the plane; the Pentagon said no weapons were fired.

The aerial encounter was the first military confrontation between the United States and Iran since militants occupied the U.S. Embassy in Tehran and took 53 Americans hostage Nov. 4.

Meanwhile, a Swiss representative in Tehran was quoted as saying the bodies of eight Americans killed in last Friday's aborted hostage rescue effort will be flown to Zurich this week. And Iranian President Abolhassan Bani-Sadr called for a special meeting of non-aligned countries to deal with the U. S. action in launching such a mission, the official Iranian news agency said.

President Carter said yesterday he believes he "made the right choice" in ordering the hostage rescue attempt.

During a visit to Kuwait, the Iranian foreign minister, Sadegh Ghotbzadeh, escaped injury when gunmen in two cars fired at his motorcade. Iran blamed the incident on neighboring Iraq.

Gunners attack foreign minister

KUWAIT [AP] — Gunmen in cars fired a hail of bullets yesterday at a motorcade carrying Iranian Foreign Minister Sadegh Ghotbzadeh, but he escaped injury, the Kuwait news agency reported. Iran blamed Iraq for the attack.

"Many shots were fired at one of the cars in the Ghotbzadeh motorcade at 9:30 this morning. No one was hurt," said a statement carried by Kuwait's official news agency.

Ghotbzadeh, who arrived in Kuwait Monday, was being driven to a meeting with Kuwait's leader, Sheik Jaber AlAhmad, when the attack occurred, the agency said.

Ghotbzadeh is visiting several Mideast countries in an attempt to improve Iran's relations with Arab governments. He came here from Lebanon after visiting Syria. From Kuwait, he is scheduled to go on to Bahrain and to the United Arab Emirates. Iran is a Moslem nation, but not Arab.

The Kuwait Interior Ministry said police tracked down two cars used in the attack and that they were loaded with weapons and explosives. There was no mention of arrests.

King of terror enters void

HOLLYWOOD [AP] — Sir Alfred Hitchcock, the master of suspense whose movies charmed and terrified audiences for more than 50 years, died of natural causes yesterday at the age of 80.

Hitchcock, who was knighted by Queen Elizabeth II of England last December, had been in failing health for the past year, plagued with arthritis and kidney failures.

His condition deteriorated over the past weekend, and his family — including his widow, Alma, daughter Patricia (Mrs. Joseph O'Connell) and three grandchildren — was with him when death came at his Bel Air home, said Herb Steinberg, a spokesman for Universal Pictures.

"I have lost a great friend, and the world has lost a man who made a tremendous contribution to our business," said actor James Stewart, who starred in Hitchcock's "Rear Window," "The Man Who Knew Too Much" and "Vertigo."

Hitchcock loved to frighten moviegoers and exercised his talent to the limit in creating chilling situations for the screen. He frequently appeared fleetingly in his own films — his few seconds on the screen becoming a trademark.

"Certainly he was a master at his profession," said actress Janet Leigh, who starred in "Psycho," when told of his death. "Whenever we did see each other, he had a wonderful little story to tell."

Narrator from "Our Hitler" holds puppet of King Ludwig II of Bavaria, while Hitler puppet sits in the background, in a dramatization of German identity.

'Our Hitler' chronicles shared guilt of Nazism

By CAROLYN MOONEY
Collegian Staff

Hans Jurgen Syberberg's awesome seven-hour film Our Hitler is a brilliant, exhausting and unprecedented examination of the Hitler who exists within each of us; the Hitler we all helped to create.

Our Hitler is as much about German identity as it is about the Fuhrer who led Germany's Third Reich to total destruction, and as much about human nature as it is about German identity. It is the third part of a film trilogy by Syberberg examining German history over the past 100 years, from the time when Germany was a loose federation of 38 states and European romanticism prevailed, to post-war Germany.

It is neither documentary nor expressionist, but a film that encompasses all genres. Much of the film's message is told in dramatic monologue by a small core of narrators whose performances are superb in spite of lengthiness. Syberberg also uses puppets (was Hitler a puppet of the people or did he make people into puppets?) and dolls, radio newscasts, and brief shots from World War II newsreels that serve to create the overwhelming propaganda of the Third Reich.

The film opens with a circus ringmaster introducing Hitler in his different roles, in "the greatest show on earth" or a rehearsal of the end of the world. The ringmaster, one of several narrators who piece the film together, calls upon the audience to act out their own versions of Hitler. "Where would Hitler be without us?" he asks. But while the theme may be entirely spelled out, and instilled in the audience early in the film, the manifestations of that theme are quite complex.

The film makes frequent use of puppets of Hitler and King Ludwig II of Bavaria, who lived when romanticism peaked in Prussia. But allusions to the past (Syberberg's first two films Ludwig, Requiem for a Virgin King and Karl May concentrate on pre-war Germany) serve only as a historical backdrop to the horrors of the Third Reich. The music of Richard Wagner, whose 19th century operas were masterpeices of art and politics and later obsessed Hitler, fade in and out throughout the film. In the same way Wagner was able to manipulate and enthrall his audiences, Hitler wanted to make his regime a complete masterpiece of social, political and economic art that would make Germany the greatest nation on earth. Hitler failed. And to take this idea one step further, the film itself is an attempt at a complete masterpiece. Sybergerg succeeded.

In shaping Germany's destiny Hitler mutilated it: creating and popularizing such terms as final solution, execution squad, inferior, cleanups, liquidate, degenerate, and merciless.

Hitler, another narrator tells the audience, was a leader who understood that whoever controls film controls the future, and in Germany from 1933—1945 Hitler controlled

GSS nominees speak

By SUZY CHAN
Collegian Staff

The Graduate Student Seante held a candidate's Night for those nominees who are running for GSS officers last night.

Currently, there are three nominations for the Presidency and one for Treasurer. Nominations will be open until Friday.

Jack Delmond, the first presidential candidate who spoke, is an anthropology major. Delmond worked at the GSS as a work-study student and also served on the Financial Committee last year. In addition, his experince in student govenment includes service on the Board of Governors, and as a member of the Campus Center Space Allocation Committee.

Delmond spoke about four problems for graduate students: funding, affirmative action, information dissemination and fiscal problems.

Jerry Husch, also a candidate for president, majors in sociology. She has served on committees such as the Parking Committee and the Provost Search Committee. She is currently working on the Chancellor's Commission on Civility and Social Relations; which deals with sexism, racism, and anti-semitism.

Husch told the senators that her experience, her background in sociology, and her varied work experience enabled her to deal with diverse groups of people.

'Awareness Day' brings education on handicaps

By BRIAN HITZ MAURICE
Collegian Staff

The Handicapped Student Collective, in an attempt to expose and educate people to the world of physical disabilities, yesterday hosted an "Awareness Day" in the Student Union Ballroom. Collective President Lara Rauscher said, "The day is being used as a chance to break the distance most people have toward handicapped people by diminishing the novelty, and to educate them about what still has to be done to "handicappism" — a very real and strong force in our society today."

Each of the booths in the Ballroom offerd an opportunity for people to experience what it's like to get around in a wheelchair, or not be able to hear clearly, or to learn something about a particular physical handicap and the equipment associated with it. The event also gave people the chance to ask questions and talk to someone.

Larry Lajoie, member of the Collective and a purple belt in Karate, gave a dissertation on "Wheelchair Karate," stating that "Karate can be for anyone, its just limited by how much you can move." Lajoie went on to say that while he couldn't throw kicks, he was quite effective with his hands, as he proved by manhandling 180 pounds of reluctant volunteer.

Collective member Sandy Cohen called the day "a chance to stress our abilites, as well as our disabilities and opening up the possibilites, for disabled people as much as possible."

Lectures paralleled "Awareness Day" activites in the ballroom as speakers from the Collective and the Handicapped Affairs Offcie spoke on topics ranging from sensory and motor impairments, to disability legislation. The lecture on "Legislation and Disability" by Ted Martneau stressed the enforcement of the Rehabilitation Act of 1974. Section 504, of this federal law man-

Andrew Young

Renee Mobley
Black Affairs Staff

"I do believe in our foreign policy." said Former Ambassador Andrew Young to an audience of nearly 2000 people at the UMass Fine Arts Center, last Monday night.

He said this despite the fact that he has disagreed with a number of Carter's foreign as will as domestic policy decisions, during the presidents 3½ year reign.

In a press conference prior to his presentation Young said of the military attempt to free the 53 American hostages in Iran, "I certainly wouldn't have advised it. It is difficult to see how such an attempt could have been successful."

Young did not, however, rule out the possibility that America's involvement in Iran may not have been in the interests of the Iranian people.

"I do think there might be legitimate gripes against the United States, given the crimes of the Shah," he said.

Later in his talk at the Fine Arts Center Young added, "It is not in the American tradition to harbor a thief and his stolen goods."

He said of the Iranian crisis that the United States past sins had begun to catch up with her. But in spite of these feelings Young did not feel that the Iranian students were justified in taking over the American embassy.

The former ambassador tended to advocate a gradual, diplomatic solution to the crisis in Iran.

"When we talk tough to appease our electorate," he said, "It causes them to talk tough to appease their citizens."

The Palestinian question was perhaps the most controversial of all of Young's divergences from official administrative policy. Young said that he felt it was his duty to meet with the Palestinian Liberation Organization.

Young said of the incident that "the PLO were offering a resolution that would have allowed Israel to exist but also called for an independent Palestinian State." Young said however that "nobody in the United States of America was ready for that kind of a resolution."

Young is not bitter, however, he is still convinced that the Carter administration has had a positive effect in many areas around the world. He claims there is a new relationship between the United States and many other countries.

Young sites the signing of the Panama Canal Treaty as an example of the Carter administrations successes abroad. He pointed out that relations with a number of African nations had improved greatly over the past three years.

On the question of Zimbabwe, Young said that the United States Government had "been on the wrong side of the question of majority rule" and that since the Carter administration had been in office the U.S. had "worked together with Britain to bring about free elections."

Young said nothing, however on the question of U.S. multinational corporations and their role in Southern Africa nor did he offer criticism of future involvement. Abel Muzorewa would probably have been closer to western standards of an acceptable government leader for Zimbabwe, but Young admits that Mugabe as a leader is "more moderate than expected," and that "It was only when they began to be the victims of violence, did they use violence themselves."

He went further to dispel myths that the war for independence was a result of influence from Communist powers.

"It did not take a communist conspiracy to tell them that they ought to be running their own country," he said.

Young emphasized Mugabe's willingness for an interracial government but he stated that whites could not exercise the control they had held under the racist regime of Ian Smith.

Young claims that Carter's foreign policy is clear-cut and he continues to support Carter in his bid for re-election.

Though Andrew Young came to UMass to speak of foreign policy he did have a few things to say about Black people in the United States and Abroad. Look for the article on this in depth interview with Andrew Young in Friday's Black Affairs.

Dear Black Affairs:

Dear Black Affairs,

I would like to express my dissapproval of the article that appeared in the Collegian on Monday, April 28, reviewing the production of "Lucky Strikes Legacy." I resent the fact that they chose to review the production on the last day of performance; it played for six days. If they reviewed the production just one week earlier like other newspapers, they could have given the campus community a chance to see the production and judge it for themselves. The only thing "doomed from the start" was Mr. Ambos' review when he began speaking of "adverse living conditions and artistically-linked self-destructive tendencies..." Mr. Ambos reached these conclusions from the racist ideas in his mind and not from anything he found in the production. It is also obvious that Mr. Ambos knows nothing about Black music or Black theater. He came to the theater with the idea of some kind of a Shakespearian dramatic performance. With dramatic conflicts and buildups and set stages and so forth. Mr. Ambos obviously did not see a script because his comments made like the "cast had to improvise, innovate and adapt to make the piece of work a dramatic presentation" is totally false. He failed to recognize the originality and innovation of Third World Theater itself. The atmosphere, the plot, the message, all these aspects were original and inventive.

Another point is that Mr. Ambos does not know what a "choreopoem" is! He was right when he said "it is not a play" and he even admitted that he did not know the meaning of a choreopoem. I can not believe that he had the audacity to review a production when he didn't even know what it was! A choreopoem is a combination of poetry and dialogue in a dramatic presentation. It is not a play with set plots, characters, and dramatic conflicts. I strongly suggest that Mr. Ambos study choreopoems, Black Music, and Black Theater before he applies unjust criticisms. In spite of Mr. Ambos' assumption the production did come together in the final act. If Mr. Ambos had really listened to Bilal's strong monologue about his feeling, attitudes, and actions as a Black musician in todays world he would have noticed that Bilal is the most in-depth character in the production. Also Mr. Ambos calls the poem by Terrence Lake "a very funny bit..." This was a poem that said something very relevent and serious about racial relations and white supremacy in our society. Personally, I heard no laughs when the piece was completed.

In closing I would like to mention that Mr. Ambos could not even get the spelling of the names correct. I would suggest that Mr. Ambos stick to criticizing pieces he might understand such as Romeo and Juliet or The King and I.

CCEBS Family Day

Joyce McLaurin
Black Affairs Staff

The 5th annual CCEBS Family Day, which was held Saturday, April 26 got underway with a welcoming address from a graduating CCEBS student Renee Molbey. She addressed the students, family and friends of the community about her experiences of being a black student on the UMass campus. She stated that these four years at UMass will never be forgotten.

Dorence Hill, recipient of the Scholarly Achievement Award, talked on the "Purpose of Family Day." Dorence Hill, who had been out of school for a number of years and majored in Chemical Engineering won other academic awards as well.

Dr. Carol Carter, director of the CCEBS Program, addressed the graduating class of 1980. She spoke about the problems that the United States is facing and how the students will have to face the "real world" once they left the University. After she addressed the class of 1980 lunch was then served.

When lunch was over the presentation of the academic awards were then presented to the students whom had high grade point averages, and to those who had made significant improvement over previous averages.

As part of the entertainment, The Voices of New Africa House brought an uplift and incressed the atmosphere with gospel songs and solos sung by Gail Hart. After the singing there was poetry reading by Marlene Ducan, Karen Thomas and Barbara Covington.

The closing of the ceremony was the presentation of the Shirley B. DuBois award which was awarded to Semaj Lycurgus and to Keeren Cooper for their community services to the minority students and organizations on the UMass campus.

Overall the CCEBS Family Day was very inspiring for all who attended. Following the Luncheon there was a parent/advisor discussion about their courses and how they are doing academically.

To the Editor

To: Everywoman's Center and Third World Woman's Task Force
From: Radical Student Union

Re: Suman Bohm and Jamila Gaston

As members of the Radical Student Union, we feel it is incumbent upon ourselves to respond to the situation involving the Third World Woman's Task Force and the Everywoman's Center. Because we had representatives on the IWW Steering Committee, we have been aware of the conflict that exists between the Task Force and the Center.

We feel that if the Everywoman's Center had questions concerning the IWW steering committee decisions, they should have addressed them to the steering committee as a whole, and not just have singled out Suman Bohm and Jamila Gaston. That in itself was racist; further, the manner in which Suman and Jamila were treated cannot be condoned by progressive people, be they white or Third World.

The fight to build a better society requires, among other things, the fight against racism in any form in society. This struggle, however, must also include introspection and analysis of our own actions and thinking. The fact that we did not say anything at an earlier stage in the conflict—our hesitancy to take an open stand—reflects our own struggle to deal with racism.

In light of the above, we support the demands of the Third World Woman's Task Force as stated in their letter to the Everywoman's Center, dated April 17, 1980.

Film

On Thursday May 1st, the TV newsfootage of the Greensboro, North Carolina Massacre will be shown at the Campus Center Concourse between 12 and 2 p.m. On November 3, 1979 the Klu Klux Klan and Nazis with the aid of the police drove into an anti Klan demonstration and selectively murdered 5 Communist Workers Party members. The film will be followed by a discussion on how November 3 incident relates to the rise of fascism and the threat of world war-with the Boston Committee to Avenge CWP %.

Budget

All Third World Senators and representatives of Third World, R.S.O.-groups should be present in the office of Third World Affairs at 6:00 today. Your presence is critical for the future planning of your programs.

The Budgets for the Undergraduates Student Senate student groups will be brought before the Senate this Wednesday, April 30, 1980, at 7:00 p.m. The budgets for Third World Organizations will be brought up as well, and there is serious concerns over the direction the SGA is going in serving Third World Student needs. With the large deficit that must be liquidated in this 1981 budget, it is almost customary to attack our funding. It is therefore very necessary that we come together to discuss precisely how to protect our scant resources.

Malcolm X

The Malcolm X Center will sponsor a Career Development Workshop by Dr. Alice Smith of the Placement Office on Thursday May 1st, 1980. The Workshop will begin at 7 p.m. at the Center.

Concert

On May 1, 8:00 p.m. at the Student Union Ballroom, UMass Archie Shepp's Quintet will perform a benefit concert for the Che-Lumumba School. This is the school's major fund-raiser for the semester. Come and bring your friends. Sponsored by B.M.C.P., Afrik-Am, Graduate Student Senate, Student Senate, Sylvan Racial Awareness Program, E.G.S.C., & The Che-Lumumba School.

Talent Show

The Malcolm X Center is sponsoring a talent show to be held on May 2 at 8:00 pm in the Hampden Dining Commons in Southwest. All Five College students are encouraged to participate. Those who wish to be in the talent show should submit the title of their act and the length of time of the act to the Malcolm X Center no later than April 28, 1980. Applications may be picked up at the Malcolm X Center in Southwest residential area at UMass.

Editorial/Opinion

Laughing G-men

I knew it. I knew I should have filled out that damned census. I mean, I didn't consciously neglect it. I even answered a few questions late one Saturday night. But it made such a good floor mop. And now I'm in big trouble. A big, green dodge is parked on the corner, all hours of the day, manned by two men in gray fed.ras; G-men.

Go on laugh. My housemates laugh too.

MARK WAGNER

They're jokingly threatening to take the rubber tree away from the window—my only cover. I nailed it to the floor. But then they can joke—they weren't at the Communist Party rally last Saturday. They think they can come and go as they please. Not me. When those G-men connect my face in the pictures from that rally to the missing census form from this area, they'll move in. Blacklisted. Jobless for life.

Those men out there are pretty tricky too. One day when they broke for lunch, this journalist comes to the door to do a human interest story on the bald man from Leverett. Well I haven't been reading the papers, as I haven't been out of the house, so I didn't know journalists are now agents for the CIA. So I answered a few of his questions—standards like, "Do you like baseball? What kind of car do you drive?" Then he hits me with the big one—"Are you Democrat, Republican, or Communist?" I stonewalled him and took the Fifth. I told him I was immune to truth serum. He was yelling questions as I threw him out. "Would you fight in Iran? What do you know about the Communist party?" Whew.

Soon after, they returned—the G-men—watching the house from the corner.

Now they knew I was a tough cookie so they tried the soft approach. This girl scout comes to the door selling cookies for the benefit of the unemployed poor. I told her I thought the unemployed were lazy and victims of their own indolence. That set them back a bit.

That's when it him me—I mean, why those men are out there. The government may appear to be negligent toward the unemployed poor in times of economic depression, but really, the growing number of unemployed is first and foremost on the government's mind. Why, if the number keeps growing, there might be a rally or something. People might start asking where the profits are hiding out. So the ruling body sends out faithful troopers in gray fedoras to keep tabs on all would-be prophets who have some inkling where the profits are.

So as the economy worsens and the necessity of inequity comes under fire, people with ideas about the shortfalls of inequity also come under fire, and the scale of American political stability balances still. And with the squeeze on, the prophets and the poor, as a mass, figure the profits are still down on the corner in that bustling liquor store. They go on throwing switchblades at each other to determine who hits the liquor store this weekend.

So as long as the prophets are kept from the profit-hungry, everything will be honkey-dorey on the profit farm. A profit's prophet ain't in a very healthy market. Meanwhile, I'll hang out here behind my rubber tree, an American held hostage, an unemployed prophet wishing he had filled out that damn census.

Soon enough the day will come, probably after we elect the man who doesn't believe there's an unemployment problem, when we can rip the pretty mask off the ugly face of corporate capitalism without serious detriment to our life span. I hope it comes soon, I'm allergic to rubber plants.

Paying for 'singles' absurd

To: Robert L. Campbell, Director
Housing Administration

Dear Mr. Campbell,

In regard to your fact sheet titled "Some Additional Questions and Answers on Rents and V.I.R.U.S." In the Sylvan Residential Area, in buildings that were never meant to be traditional dormitories, the "designed singles" you speak of were never meant to house anyone. To charge an extra $50 for rooms of this size (approximately 8' x 10') is absolutely ridiculous. These are the smallest rooms I have ever seen in any dormitory on any campus. They are made even smaller by the quantity of furniture that occupies the room, due to the lack of a closet, shelf space, etc.

As for the "double singles" you speak of, in Sylvan these are the rooms that were designed to house one person. Now you intend to charge an extra $75 per semester because you can't find someone to stuff into it.

Please, let's not be absurd.

Sincerely yours
Charles Myers
Asst. Head of Residence
Brown House, Sylvan

To the Editor:

The UMass Hunger Force recently raised $3,300, all of which will be sent through OXFAM to help feed the hungry in Cambodia. There is no way this could have been done had it not been for the help and contributions of many thoughtful people. So, we would like to thank the following people and groups who generously donated their time, services, and dollars.

Thanks to the almost 3,000 University students who gave up their evening meal at the dining commons April 17, and all those who have given money throughout the semester at the Hunger Task Force/OXFAM table or at other locations.

We're also grateful to the Grad Senate for helping so much with printing and to the Student Union Craft Shop for working on T-shirts. Thanks also to the bands Loose Caboose and Crockett performed at the April 19 benefit and to all those who attended.

A special thank you to the anonymous friend who donated $200. We truly appreciate this generous gift.

We'll play it safe by thanking anyone who in anyway contributed to this worthy cause, and by letting you know that any further gifts are always appreciated, as the need to combat world hunger is always with us. Thanks for showing that you care.

Telegram touted

To the Editor:

On April 25th, a telegram was drafted by the Public Policy Office, signed by co-President Richard LaVoice and sent to President Carter. That telegram, sent on behalf of the student body, unequivocably expressed our dismay over the President's decision to use the military to free the hostages being held in Iran. Furthermore it requested that in the future, every measure be taken to insure world peace.

It has come to the attention of this office that this telegram has come under attack by certain members of the student body. While we are sure those same students would be the first to volunteer their services to the President for any future adventures in that part of the world, the Public Policy Office maintains that such a futile attempt to free the hostages was nothing more than a means for the President to build support for his draft registration bill presently in the Senate.

This office wholeheartedly endorses the initiative taken by Mr. LaVoice and will continue to do so on such matters in the future.

Sincerely,
Donald P. Morse

SCERA budget weakens effort

To the Editor:

Budget cut recommendations for many of the student organizations were handed down recently by the Senate Budget Committee and will be voted on Wednesday night, April 30. The recommendations included a substantial cut for the Student Center for Educational Research and Advocacy budget, which came to a total of 28 per cent below last year's budget when mandated fixed increases are taken into account (mandated by the Senate and State).

Student stipends were cut by 44 percent. This will force the termination of nearly half of all student staff, the basis of SCERA's effectiveness, and will mean the depletion of many of the group's teams (Women's Issues, Student Affairs, Academics, Legislative, Anti-Racism, etc.).

We understand that in times of restraint for the whole RSO budget, student groups must unify and accept budget cuts. However, regardless of what transpires on the Senate floor Wednesday night, we would like to emphasize that SCERA's staff and the issues they promote are beneficial to the entire student body. As representatives of other student organizations, we feel that weakening SCERA weakens our efforts as well.

Jose Guillermo Trejo, the last presidential candidate who spoke, is from the Civil Engineering Department. His work experience includes serving as GSS treasurer for 1979 as Eco Latino Editor for Nummo News and various other positions on campus organizations.

Trejo said that the cut in Revenue Sharing funds and the lack of an authentic Affirmative Action policy are some of the crucial issues graduate students have to face in the next fiscal year.

Michael Pazyra, the only nominee for Treasurer, is a first year MBA student. He said he worked with the city auditor and tax collector in Northampton last year, and has an extensive background in financing and accounting.

The election will be held next Monday and Tuesday at the Blue Wall.

dates that any government— aided body must provide adequated access to handicapped people. The problems of mobility around campus were discussed in this light.

"We don't want to be the exception. Sure we're disabled but that's not our whole person. Why should it have to be our whole life?" Lara Rauscher said, when speaking about access to buildings and public transport. She went on to say "the more visible we get — the more commonplace a handicapped person becomes — the more people will realize that we're real people who have lives just like them."

SW Women's Center offers booklet on women's films

By TRACEY A. EASTMAN
Special to the Collegian

The increased desire to hold workshops, practicums, seminars, and support groups dealing with the many aspects of the Women's Movement has spurred the popularity of topical films.

The Southwest Women's Center is organizing a comprehensive film resource booklet listing 14 films available for tree use from UMass, Hampshire College, and the Southwest Women's Centers. The booklet clearly outlines the procedures for odering films and equipment for workshops on women's issues. Along with each film listed is a short note outlining the film's concentration and its quality, as determined by women at the center. The following is a brief listing of the films available on women's issues for no charge in the Five College Area, and a short comment on the quality of each.

As a biographical film, Gertrude Stein: When This You See Remember me, cannot be beat. It is available through Hampshire College and recounts the life of Gertrude Stein — a woman truly ahead of her time. Dealing with alternating sex-roles, I change, I am the same, is available through Hampshire College. This extremely short film strip seemed a bit too bizarre and meaningless. The story of the birth of the Women's Movement is recounted beautifully in Woman's Film, owned by the Southwest Women's Center. Breakfast Dance (Hampshire College) and Out of True (UMass) examine the role of women in the home and the pressures as mother and wife. Although it is a substantially shorter film, Breakfast Dance gives this particular topic the symbolic attention it deserves, whereas Out of True is unnecessarily long and deals with it in a more archaic style.

Five Women: Five Briths is an excellent film dealing with women, childbirth and the right to choose where and when it shall take place. This film is also available through Hampshire College.

The role of internatinal women is examined in such excellent cultural films as Boran Women and Eskimo Artist — Kenojuak, both available through Hampshire College. The intrinsically important issue of sexual preference is discussed clearly and beautifully in Consenting Adults, a British Broadcasting Company production availaLle from UMass. The self-image of women is introduced in Betty Tells Her Story, which will make for a fertile conversation sparker. Got to Push and A Dancer's World both deal with the working world, although the former deals directly with women at work whereas the latter is simply a dry account of the dance techniques of Martha Graham.

FILM REVIEW

The ever prominent issue of sexism in advertisng is dealt with successfully in both Do Blondes Have More Fun and Killing Us Softly. They are both available from Hampshire College, but Killing Us Softly is definitely the more comprehensive of the two. This film, which featured Jean Kilbourne as lecturer, is a fantastic representation of the sexist view of women in advertisinq.

The popularity of films on women's issues is skyrocketing. Unfortunatley, the amount of films available at no cost is minimal in the Five College area. The resource booklet will aid substantially in locating those films that are available. Anita Goldin at the Southwest Women's Center is responsible for organizing the film project.

★ Hitler

film. He usually viewed several films each evening, banning those that conflicted with Nazi doctrines and often changing the soundtracks of newsreels.

In an incredibly hard-hitting rollcall scene (Syberberg uses this device several times to intensify and dramatize related events and ideas), Hitler as a ventriloquist's dummy depicts his modern-day influence in Vietnam, Cambodia, right-wing Chile, Africa, and most of the world. No other person did more to change the Western world, he charges. And, he says hauntingly, "We have been particularly victorious in America."

The film's original title, Hitler—A Film from Germany, was changed by the American distributor, Francis Ford Coppola. But the translation is an accurate one, given the focus of the film. And at the end, another narrator warns us that this Hitler will come again—in a different disguise—if we decide we want him to.

Our Hitler, like a rich meal where you sit at the dinner table for a few hours, takes a long time to digest. It could, conceivably, be significantly shorter, but it would lose the intensity of Syberberg's message, and much of the material simply could not be consumed over a shorter time span. In fact, the film contains so much—some of it may hit the audience far later—that the digestion process just may be one that never really ends.

LOSE 20 POUNDS IN TWO WEEKS!

Famous U.S. Women Ski Team Diet

During the non-snow off season the U.S. Women's Alpine Ski Team members go on the "Ski Team" diet to lose 20 pounds in two weeks. That's right – 20 pounds in 14 days! The basis of the diet is chemical food action and was devised by a famous Colorado physician especially for the U.S. Ski Team. Normal energy is maintained (very important) while reducing. You keep "full" – no starvation – because the diet is designed that way. It's a diet that is easy to follow whether you work, travel or stay at home.

This is, honestly, a fantastically successful diet. If it weren't, the U.S. Women's Ski Team wouldn't be permitted to use it! Right? So, give yourself the same break the U.S. Ski Team gets. Lose weight the scientific, proven way. Even if you've tried all the other diets, you owe it to yourself to try the U.S. Women's Ski Team Diet. That is, if you really do want to lose 20 pounds in two weeks. Order today. Tear this out as a reminder.

Send only $2.00 ($2.25 for Rush service — cash is O.K. — to: NORTHWEST PRODUCTS, P.O. BOX 78232, Seattle, Wash. 98178. Don't order unless you want to lose 20 pounds in two weeks! Because that's what the Ski Team Diet will do.

Crew defeated by Coast Guard 8

By STEVEN WESTRA
Collegian Staff

The UMass men's and women's crews hope to rebound from tough losses last weekend with a strong showing at the New England Championships on Lake Quinsigamond in Worcester Saturday.

Last Sunday, the men's varsity eightman crew lost a close race to the Coast Guard Academy Eight on Lake Wickabaug in West Brookfield. UMass was ahead by nearly a boat length at the 1000 meter mark of the 2000 meter race, but, ending up losing by three seconds to a fast finishing Coast Guard Crew. Freshman coach Dave Kumlin's first freshman eight was the only UMass crew to come from Lake Wickabaug with a victory.

Last Saturday, the women's cr rowed against women's crews of Smith, Simmons and W sley on the Connecticut River in Hadley. The UMass var women raced in four man shells and came in second to e women of Smith.

Ruiz loses crown

By DAVE O'HARA
AP Sports Writer

BOSTON — The Boston Athletic Association stripped Rosie Ruiz of the 1980 Boston Marathon women't title Tuesday, awarding victory to Jacqueline Gareau of Montreal on the grounds the New York office worker did not run the entire course.

Will Cloney, director of the prestigious race since 1946, told a packed news conference that a week-long investigation showed "beyond any reasonable doubt" that Ruiz did not cover the 26-mile, 385-yard route from Hopkinton to Boston's Back Bay.

Cloney said that during the week-long investigation, BAA officials were "able to chart the women's race from about the midpoint in Wellesley to beyond Kenmore Square, less than one-half mle from the finish."

He said that the first 17 women were checked at Wellesley, where Gareau was the leader. He said that more than 10,000 photos taken by four high speed cameras from Wellesley to about a mile from the finish show Gareau in front.

'Miss Ruiz did not show up in any sequence in the photos," he added.

Ruiz, 26, and allegedly running in her second marathon, was clocked at the finish line in 2 hours, 31 minutes, 56 seconds. Gareau was far back in 2:34:28. However, both times bettered the women's course record of 2:35:15 by Maine college senior Joan Benoit in 1979.

"Grave doubts" were expressed by officials and other runners immediately after Ruiz was crowned with the laurel wreath and given the winner's medal. Her time would have been the third fastest by a woman in the world.

She qualified for the Boston run by being credited with 2:56:28 in the New York Marathon last fall. Just last Friday, however, New York officials disqualified her on the basis of "very strong evidence" that she didn't even cross the finish line.

Cloney vapped the investigation by meeting with Ruiz for nearly an hour in a Boston hotel late Monday. He then made his final recommendation of disqualification to the BAA Board of Directors, which unanimously upheld him.

Asked if he considered Ruiz "a liar, fraud or cheat," Cloney replied: "I would never use those words about another human being."

"If she did anything wrong, it was on the spur of the moment," he said. "I'm not a doctor, not a psychiatrist, but I'm convinced that Rosie thinks she ran the race and won the race."

Cloney said that Ruiz told him at the meeting Monday she would not return the winner's medal. He added, "I hope that on reflection Rosie would decide it would be the sportsmanlike thing to do."

"I know what I did and I will prove it in the future," Ruiz said after the meeting with Cloney, adding that she planned to continue running.

Cloney said that he had extended Ruiz "an open invitation" to run in the 85th annual Boston Marathon next year. "This is all over now."

Ruiz was reported in seclusion and not available for comment in New York.

NFL Draft

Lions tab Sims, he wants $5M

By BRUCE LOWITT
AP Sports Writer

NEW YORK — The Detroit Lions, to the surprise of practically no one, picked Oklahoma running back Billy Sims as the No.1 choice today in the National Football League's college draft.

But the San Francisco 49ers, with the No.2 selection, traded it to New York for the Jets' pair of first-round picks.

The Jets then grabbed the premier pass-catcher in this year's college crop, Texas' Johnny "Lam" Jones. The plan is for him to play on one side while equally devastating speedster Wesly Walker will play the other wide receiver spot for the Jets.

The 49ers had been expected to select quarterback Marc Wilson of Brigham Young had they not been able to make a deal. When the first of their two new first-round picks arrived, though, they used that No.13 selection instead for Rice running back Earl Cooper hoping to fill the vacancy created by O.J. Simpson's retirement. With the other opening-round pick, No.20 overall, the 49ers chose defensive Jim Stuckey of Clemson.

By then, Wilson was gone, drafted 16th by the Oakland Raiders. It was a somewhat surprising development considering the recent Oakland-Houston quarterback swap in which the Raiders gave up Ken Stabler and got Dan Pastorini from the Oilers.

Sims, 24, who won the Heisman Trophy as a junior and was runner-up to Southern Cal's Charles White as a senior, was the first of five running backs selected in the 2-hour, 51 minute opeing round. The last was White, taken 27th — next to last — by the Cleveland Browns.

The other running backs to go in the opening round were Texas A&M's Curtis Dickey, fifth by the Baltimore Colts; Cooper and Notre Dame's Vagas Ferguson, 25th by New England.

Whether Sims will end up with the Lions is still open to question. His agent, Jerry Argovitz, has been seeking a six-year contract worth $5 million, far more than the Lions say they are willing to pay.

It is possible that Sims will follow the route of last year's No.1 pick, Ohio State linebacker Tom Cousineau, who couldn't come to terms with Buffalo and wound up in the Canadian Football League.

Sims took a swipe at the Lions, who shared the league's worst record in 1979. "I really don't want to go to a 2-14 team, but that's the system and I think I can help them build a winner," he said.

Pats get James, Ferguson of ND

FOXBORO, Mass. (AP) —
The New England Patriots, seeking to plug holes before they develop, chose Tennessee defensive back Roland James and Notre Dame running back Vegas Ferguson with their two first-round picks in Tuesday's National Football League draft.

Concerned about two free agents, cornerback Mike Haynes and fullback Sam Cunningham, the Patriots moved early to shore up those two positions.

New England has 12 picks in the 12 rounds of the two-day draft, conducted in New York.

We were going by position, but I think, in this situation, we got somebody off the quality list," said Patriots' General Manager Bucko Kilroy, referring to James.

Mittmen defense playing well

The UMass baseball team has dropped to second place in the New England College Poll this week after spending the previous two weeks on top. The University of Maine is number one with a record of 16—8—1 with UMass at 12—8—1. Since the poll covers the week's happenings from Sunday to Monday, it does not include doubleheader sweeps by UMass and Maine over Providence College and Husson respectively. Maine is 18—8—1, UMass is 14—8—1.

For the first time as coach of the Minutemen, Dick Bergquist must hope for a at-large bid in the NCAA tournament for post-season play. The school's resignation from the Eastern Collegiate Athletic Association makes the team ineligigible for the New England tournament.

"We really have to beat the best teams in New England," Bergquist said, "that usually means the best ECAC qualifier. It is tough when you have to compete for an at large bid with the rest of the country." Bergquist explained that there is no set number of at large choices from any area, but the best teams outside of the qualifying tournaments, such as the ECAC.

Perhaps the most overlooked aspect of the Minutemen success this season has been the defense. Pre-season worries about consistency, particularly in what is largely a brand new infield, have been dispelled. The regular infield of Dave Oleksak, Warren McReddie, Vin Bonanno and Barry and Dean Bennett have committed only 21 errors in 23 games for a .913 per game average. Very respectable for a squad that plays a lot of games in cold, wet weather. Those who braved the weather Monday will attest to that...

Then there are the defensive plays that are gone that will not be forgotten. There is third baseman Barry Bennett's diving stab to his left and put-out of a Providence batter Monday to end the first game. Or rightfielder Doug Aylward's recovery after diving backwards for a ball hit over his head. He fired a perfect throw to the cutoff man, McReddie, who nailed a Providence player with a throw to catcher John Kraham. Aylward, incidentally, is the team's leading hitter at .363. Sources say his name has been tossed around in scouting circles.

One of the more "disappointed" players on the team is centerfielder Mike McEvilly. Though his average is .320 with a team leading 19 runs batted in, the captain is off his hitting game.

"Mike is in a little bit of a hitting slump," Bergquist said. "He is still a quality college hitter and is one of the most feared hitters in New England."

Least classy performance of the year so far goes to Providence coach Don Mezzanote for his verbal torments of his own pitcher in the second game of Monday's doubleheader. Seeing his team losing 5—0 must have been too much for Mezzanote as he ripped Friar pitcher Scott Corliss for control problems in the sixth inning. It nearly came to a head when Warren McReddie asked for time out when Corliss was already into his delivery. McReddie has to jump back into the box, but Corliss' pitch was high. "Damn it, you have a free pitch and you can't throw a strike," Mezzanote yelled for all to hear. That is something Bergquist would never do. His quiet and confident rapport is admired by the squad. How many coaches, high school, college, or pro, dress and shower with their players.

NOTES: Minuteman hurler Chuck Thompson is the number one pitcher in the Yankee Conference to date. He is 4—1 with a 1.79 earned run average over 50 innings. Remember, he pitched fourteen innings in the 3—3 tie against Holy Cross...Thompson was scheduled to pitch against Harvard (sixth in the N.E. poll) but the game was postponed because of weather. It has been rescheduled for Thursday in Cambridge...Cross-town Amherst College is on top of the division three poll this week with a 16—7 record.

Queen's University from Kingston, Ontario slipped by the UMass Rugby Football Club yesterday 7-3 after an early try and penalty kick gave it a lead it would hold throughout the afternoon. They were just yards away from another try when time ran out at Boyden field.

Queen's University is on a short tour and another of its wins was over the Springfield Club, 18-12 this week-end. They are Ontario champions with an 8-2 record.

Against UMass, their first try came just minutes into the first half after a scrum near the Mass. end zone. Rick Powers ran the ball in for the try and a 4-0 lead. Derek Redmen upped their lead to seven with a penalty kick midway through the first half.

Late in the period, UMass' Jim Nagle intercepted a Queen's College pass near the Mass. end zone preventing any further scoring.

UMass took control early in the second half, bringing the ball into Queen's territory and capitalizing with a three-point penalty kick booted by Dave Packard.

This past weekend at Boyden fields, Dartmouth won the New England College Rugby Tourney. UMass won in the first round with a win over the University of New Hampshire but lost to Boston University in double ovetime. BU lost to Darmouth in the next round.

Saturday, UMass plays host to the Boston Pilgrims Rugby Football Club with sides A and B to see action.

Iranian tug-of-war

Split on return of bodies, political prisoners

Associated Press

A leading ayatollah put the bodies of eight U.S. commandos at the center of a new political tug-of-war in Iran yesterday, saying Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini or the Revolutionary Council, not President Abolhassan Bani-Sadr, must decide whether the Americans' remains should be sent home.

As Ayatollah Mohammad Beheshti set out these conditions, two Catholic clergymen were visiting the Tehran morgue where the bodies were being kept.

The two — Greek Catholic Archbishop Hilarion Capudji and papal nuncio Monsignor Annibale Bugnini — prayed and sprinkled holy water over the bodies, remains of eight servicemen killed in an aircraft collision when the attempt to rescue the U.S. Embassy hostages was aborted last Friday in the Iranian desert.

Capudji, with the Swiss government and the International Red Cross, has taken on the responsibility for transferring the bodies out of Iran.

Iran's domestic troubles, meanwhile, flared into terrorist violence in London yesterday.

Three armed Iranian Arabs, supporters of autonomy for Iran's Arab-populated southwest, invaded the Iranian Embassy in London and took some 20 hostages, police said. Unconfirmed reports said they threatened to blow up the building if the Iranian government does not free 91 political prisoners by noon today.

The terrorists reported one of their hostages was wounded and asked for a doctor. The victim was not identified. Some witnesses reported having heard shooting inside the building shortly after the takeover.

The raiders, reportedly armed with submachine guns or carbines, delivered their ultimatum in a telephone call to the British Broadcasing Corp.

The BBC said they also demanded a safe flight out of Britian for themselves and their hostages.

One hostage, a woman who police said was suffering from severe shock, was released five hours after the takeover and was carried out on a stretcher.

Police said the gunmen identified themselves as Arabs from Iran's largely Arab southwestern province of Khuzestan — which they call Arabistan — who support Arab autonomy from the Persian-dominated revolutionalry government of Iran. They told the BBC the 91 prisoners are being held in Khuzestan.

Ayatollah Beheshti, who is justice minister and first secretary of the ruling Revolutionary Council, heads the Islamic Republican Party, which is trying to undercut the strength of President Bani-Sadr in order to solidify the dominance of the Moslem clergy in Iran.

After the Americans' bodies were recovered over the weekend, Beheshti said the Council would decide their disposition. But Bani-Sadr later said the bodies would be handed over to the intermediaries without precondition.

Addressing a Tehran news conference yesterday, Beheshti said Iran does not want money for the bodies. But he said the repatriation of the remains "must be decided either by the Imam (Khomeini) or the Revolutionary Council."

When a reporter suggested that keeping bodies is against Islamic morality, Beheshti replied, "Islam is based on the morality of humanity and nothing has been conducted but Islamic morality."

The bearded clergyman did not elaborate on the plans for the bodies, but he left the clear impression that the transfer might be held up.

'Threat of war' teach-in slated

By JACKSON KATZ
Collegian Staff

A teach-in on "The Threat of War" will be held today, tomorrow and Saturday at UMass and Amherst College.

The teach-in, sponsored by a group which calls itself the Student-Faculty Organizing Committee, will feature speakers, panels, and workshops on the draft, Iran, Afghanistan, the energy crisis, experiences of Vietnam veterans and war resisters, and many other related domestic and international topics.

The teach-in was planned, said UMass psychology professor Howard Gadlin of the organizing committee, in response to the increasing militarism of our government and in society, the impending reistatement of draft registration, and the danger and precariousness of the present world situation.

Comapring this teach-in to the ones held around the country during the Vietnam War, Gadlin explained that "teach-ins during the Vietnam War arose out of a sense of opposition to policies that were objectionable combined then with a demand for accurate education and information about what was really going on. Teach-ins provided more education that the media or the government were willing or able to provide."

Seymour Melamn, armaments expert and author of "Pentagon Capitalism," will speak on the "New Militarism" at the kick-off session of the teach-in tonight, at 7:30 in the Campus Center Auditorium. Also tonight, anthropology professor Johnnetta Cole will speak about what the "new militarism" means for the United States and what we can do about it. Two UMass students will also speak.

The panels and workshops tomorrow and Saturday feature Ashruf Ghane, a student from Afghanistan, speaking about "Inside Afghanistan"; Majajathata Mokoena, a student from Soweto talking about "The Struggle in South Africa"; Billy Stewart, Vietnam war resister, speaking on "Resistance"; Anna Gyorgy, author of "No Nukes", telling "Who's Behind Nuclear Power and Why?"; Alan Wolfe, author and contributor to "The Nation", giving a talk on "Is There a Soviet

A priest, a home for NYC's street kids

Fr. Bruce Ritter tells of sexploitation

By SCOTT SOLOMON

Staff photo by Paul Price.

Father Bruce Ritter, the founder of New York City's Covenant House, a shelter for runaway children and teenage prostitutes, last night told a capacity crowd at the Student Union Ballroom that "We are the ones" who are feeding the multi-billion dollar sex industry in the United States.

"There would not be a sex industry if there were no customers," he said. "There would not be a sex industry. if everyone understood that there were tens of thousands of victims in this supposedly 'victimless' crime. There would not be a sex industry if people did not think that sex was entertaining. Because we tolerate the whole range of sexual establishments, we have made Under 21 necessary."

Ritter outlined with extraordinary calm the horror and violence which occurs almost daily within the 10-block area around Times Square, the center of New York's sex industry.

"Gail was 17," he began. "She was not a very pretty kid, and she had a tough time making the $300 that her pimp required her to take in. She was chopped up in dozens of pieces and delivered to various parts of New York and New Jersey, wrapped up as Christmas presents."

But Ritter not only recognized a problem of adaption for the thousands of kids who roam the city streets, but also a difficulty for the 40 full-time volunteers who live and work with the 53-year-old Franciscan priest.

"Most people can adapt fairly well to the external environment," he told a press conference prior to the speech. "It is the trans-cultural environment that takes getting used to."

Ritter's staff, which aside from the 40 volunteers includes 250 additional staff people, and ranges, as he says, "from a widow from New Jersey who says she's 68 but is probably closer to 70, to an 18 year-old kid from Indiana." Ritter invited the entire audience to stay with him and his staff for a few days, to experience what Covenant House is all about.

"I can never seem to forget the faces of the two kids who came to me one night and said 'Are you Bruce?' And I said yes. And they said, 'Will you take us in?' And I said no, we have no more room. One of the kids started to cry and said to me, 'What are we going to do?' I will never ever forget their faces. I remember them as clearly as I see your faces right now." It was after that incident that Ritter established the one policy imposed upon his staff: No child may be turned away.

After his speech, the Newman Club presented Father Ritter with a check for $262.63, which was raised during last week's "Fun Run for Ritter."

Carter changes plans; begins campaign trail

WASHINGTON — President Carter, abandoning his Rose Garden campaign strategy, said yesterday he will begin "limited" campaign travel.

The president, addressing a group of community leaders in the White House, said he could embark on a new course because the crises that he said kept him in Washington "are manageable enough."

Except for a trip Monday to Antonio, Texas, to visit injured survivors of the aborted hostage rescue mission in Iran, Carter has limited his publicly announced travel to trips to Camp David, the presidential retreat in western Maryland.

The president halted his public travel when Iranian militants took American hostages in a seizure of the U.S. Embassy in Tehran on Nov. 4.

U.S., Turkey consider defense agreements

ANKARA, Turkey — Turkish parliamentary approval of a new U.S.-Turkish defense agreement, reopening 12 key American-manned bases in Turkey, hinges on U.S. congressional approval, the semi-officail Anatolia news agency said yesterday.

The five-year agreement, renewable after five yars, regulates the status of the bases, the nature and scope of U.S. military aid to Turkey, cooperation toward development of Turkey's defense industry.

The reopening of the American bases, used to monitor Soviet military and nuclear activities, sparked a growing controversy in Turkey because of their possible use as a staging point against Iran.

UM students run raffle for hospitalized friend

By MARC FAGELSON
Collegian Staff

As UMass student Linda Polhemus enters her fifth week in a hospital bed following an auto accident in Belchertown, friends and former colleagues David May and Mary Jane McIntyre have initiated a raffle to help raise money for her.

May and McIntyre, both UMass Hotel, Restaurant and Travel Administration majors, began selling the raffle tickets Monday in the Campus Center. The tickets cost $1 apiece and will be sold until May 12.

Thirteen prizes are offered in the raffle, May said yesterday, most of which were donated by organizations that knew Polhemus, a hostess at Plumbley's Restaurant in Amherst.

She is a member of the Amherst Swim and Health club, and the organization has donated a month of free participation at the club as one of the prizes. Other prizes include dinners for two at the Rusty Scupper and Plumbley's, and a prime rib dinner at the Christmas Inn in Williamsburg.

A $25 gift certificate to the House of Walsh clothes store as well as a $20 certificate to the Salt Box women's clothes store is offered, and winners may trade prizes if they want to, May said. Also, gift certificates for $10 each are offered from Fenton's sports store and from Faces of Earth in Amherst.

"People from work have gone and given blood for her because she's lost 16 pints of blood since she's been in the hospital," May said. "Her attitude is that she's lucky to be alive, and she's been very inspirational to all of us that know her."

English majors' career day set

By LAURIE FULLERTON
Collegian Staff

English majors may seek valuable answers to career questions this Saturday by attending Career Day at Memorial Hall from 10:00 a.m. to 3 p.m. Some 50 alumni English majors from professions ranging from law to publishing will be offering guidance and information pertaining to the English major.

Some of the alumni may offer jobs to prospective graduates, but, most will provide advice and tell how their past experiences relate to their current careers. Workshops will be set up for students interested in law, communications, education and other fields of study. Students can gain solid information and valuable contacts from alumni, and perhaps reassurance of their choice of English as a major.

Chief undergraduate advisor John Clayton created the idea of a Career Day in hopes of dispelling the myth of English as a teaching major. "The most important thing for students to know is that there is more one can do with the English major. But, it requires preparation now, because the English major is not a choice of a profession, it's preparation for a career or changing careers," Clayton said.

In speaking with alumni, Clayton found that most professed they were not the "typical English major." It soon became evident that there is no typical English major, with alumni entering many different fields. The alumni on Career Day will be discussing the values and the liabilities of the English major, though most agree if they had the choice they would major in English again.

However, some alumni believe that though English was a satisfying major, they found that there is no money in English. In a recent study done by the Student Affairs Research and Evaluation Office, it was found that the unemployment rate for Humanities and Fine Arts graduates in 1974 was double the rate of all other University graduates that year. Though men with B.A.'s in English are seen as well-educated, the study indicated, many women are viewed as untrained and are discriminated against in the job market.

Career Day should prove to be a very important step toward deciding on a career, with answers from people who have experienced the 'real world.' A lunch of cold cuts will be served, and students will be asked to pay two dollars. If the weather permits, Career Day will be held on the lawn across from Memorial Hall. Students are urged to attend and ask any questions they may have.

Norm Duphily and Joel Brava were among the many students who waited until the last minute to preregister yesterday, causing quite a hectic day for Whitmore workers. Staff photo by Paul Price.

Senate budget next week

By SEAN HARVEY
Collegian Staff

The Chairman of the Undergraduate Student Senate Budget Committee told the senate last night the fiscal 1981 budget will be presented at next weeks meeting "with or without the Recognized Student Organization's budget" figures.

Senate action on the fiscal 1981 budget has been delayed up until now due to RSO's failure to submit its budget.

Budget Committee Cahirman Bari Njiiri said the RSO budget is "still a mystery" and he said a decision cannot be made until it is submitted. He said Vice-Chancellor for Student Affairs Dennis L. Madson is scheduled to meet with him tomorrow morning to submit a figure for RSO. A memo was received from Madson this week indicating the figure would be $312,000, $36,000 above the fiscal 1980 figure of $276,000.

"If Madson does this," Njiiri said, "one alternative would be to cut RSO groups by one, two or three percent across the board."

SGA co-president Rich Moran said he felt it could be kept at $276,000 because there are cutbacks that can be made in RSO.

"Madson has the power to drive us into a serious deficit," Njiiri said. "I'm hoping he will be prudent enough to realize we can't afford an unbalanced budget."

Njiiri added that the budget will be presented at next week's senate meeting, "with or without the RSO budget."

In other action, the Senate passed a motion by student senator David O'Malley to have Co-president Richard LaVoice make a public apology to the UMass student body through the Collegian for sending a mailgram to President Carter on behalf of the student body.

The first sentence of the telegram read: On behalf of the student body at UMass, Amherst we would like to express our extreme disapproval over using military force to free the hostages in Iran."

Todd and Utopia: 'setting new standard'

By ROB HUFFMAN
Collegian Staff

Spring Semester 1980 will go down in my book as the semester when the Union Program council truly outdid itself. So far this spring, the UPC has presented major concerts with the Kinks, Pat Metheny, Jerry Garcia, Taj Mahal, and Lene Lovich, as well as promising newer bands such as the Mundanes and Robin Lane and the Chartbusters at the Bluewall.

Tuesday night, in the last major show before the Spring Concert, a new standard for excellence was set, as Todd Rundgren brought his state-of-the-art multi media technology show to the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall. Excuse me, did I say Todd Rundgren? I mean to say Utopia. For Utopia is indeed a band—a perfectly functioning unit of four parts. Todd is undoubtedly the leader, and the man whom the people come to see, but Roger Powell, John Wilcox, and Kasim Sulton each deserve and receive a share of the spotlight. Todd's megalomania is well contained these days, and instead of coming across as a brooding genius or acid-charged space cadet, Todd Rundgren is a versatile, energetic entertainer, destined to remain at the top for many years to come. And he might even be rock's first real TV star.

Opening with "The Road To Utopia" from their latest record, the first half of the show was solid rock and roll, with few surprises. The staging was simple, but obviously well designed, with small platforms for each of the performers. Todd judiciously shared lead vocals with Kasim Sulton and John Wilcox, and even played drums while John played bass, and Kasim played lead guitar. While heartily encouraging audience response during the first set, it was the versatility and amazing performances of the second half of the show that brought the crowd to it's feet.

Muskie ponders post

AUGUSTA, Maine [AP] — Agreeing to serve as President Carter's secretary of state constitutes an endorsement of the Carter administration, Sen. Edmund S. Muskie said yesterday.

He had previously been neutral over the Democratic presidential nomination.

"I think the act of accepting this responsbility is an act of endorsement," Muskie said at a news conference one day after Carter nominated him to replace Cyrus Vance, who resigned after the failed attempt to rescue the Iranian hostages.

"This job is a non-political job and the appointment ought not be made related to political objectives," Muskie said.

"Nevertheless, I would not have accepted this responsibility unless I intended to support the president's administration," Muskie added.

The Senate veteran of 22 years returned to the greendomed granite Statehouse in Augusta where his political career began as a state representative in 1947. He and his wife, Jane, toured the corridors shaking hands with well-wishers.

"Congratulations" and "good luck" were the often repeated greetings from legislators, Statehouse employees and Democrats.

Transsexualism explained

By LINDA PLAUT
Collegian Staff

Janice Raymond, Women's Studies professor at UMass and author of The Transsexual Empire, yesterday told a group of students how a role-oriented, patriarchal society fosters transsexualism.

She said transsexualism would be less ot a prpoblem in a society in which sex roles were less rigidly defined. "In this society, you must live out your role as society defines it or you are treated as a deviant," she said. "It is this rigidity of sex-roles that makes potential candidates for transsexual surgery."

Raymond applied a feminsit perspective to her study of transsexualism because, she said, "The issue of transsexualism goes to the heart of how patriarchy oppresses women through sex-role stereotyping. Without a feminsist analysis, the deepest dimension of the transsexual problem would not even be touched upon."

Raymond said the ratio of men to women who undergo sex change operations is four to one. She said transsexual surgery was intitially developed for men by men. Only later did the medical profession turn toward women. She cited news magazine statistics stating that 10,000 people in the United States have gone through the operation.

Transsexualism is one of the ultimate conclusions of man's possesion of woman, where man creates woman in his image, Raymond said. A transsexual is the ultimate man-made woman. As with all women, a transsexual's role and image are identified for her by men.

The role of the gender identification clinics in facilitating pre-surgery passing from one sex role to another reinforces sterotypical behavior, where a man must be made to pass as a woman or vice-versa. These clinics, then, are institutions of sex-role control, Raymond said.

"Transsexual surgery works as a social tranquilizer," she said "It is a superficial solution to a very deep problem."

In a foul mood

Dear Editor,

I am in a foul mood this morning, and I'll tell you why. I'm scheduled to begin meetings with my advisees this morning but I'll have trouble functioning because I was kept awake all night by the drunken louts at Lambda Chi Alpha house, which I have the misfortune to live next to. These sorry examples of the student body conducted an all-night beer blast, which just concluded at 6 a.m. Their revelry was complete with the usual side-show: continuous bellowing, pounding on pots and pans, and an ear-splitting stereo.

A visit from the Amherst police at 4 a.m. only slowed them down for a few minutes; as soon as the cruisers departed with the usual admonition to "keep it down," the decibels went right back up. The pale light of dawn brought a new round of shouting to the neighbors, "Wake up!" The weaker stomachs among the group staggered onto the porch to puke their guts over the railing, and some gallant in his red underwear came out to yell vulgarities at passing female joggers.

As a visiting faculty member looking for a room last fall, I was assured by my eager landlord that the boys in the frat houses which surround my house were generally well-behaved. Horseshit! The cacophony is never-ending; fortunately I return to a quieter home on weekends, which I am told are absolute bedlam. The one weekend I did stay here last fall was enlivened by the brothers at Alpha Tau Gamma, across the street, tossing furniture into the street to create an obstacle course for motorists. These worthies sit on their roof on warm days, tossing bottles into their yard and hassling passing women.

The irony is that my father was a member of Lambda Chi Alpha, which I understand is an "honor" engineering fraternity. Unfortunately, the college I attended had no fraternities, and we carried on our hell-raising safely isolated from the townspeople. I'm sure the fraternaties here engage in a modicum of worthy activities, but if these bozos keep up the racket I'll be sorely tempted to swear out a complaint in the nearest district court.

Sincerely,
Peter Irons
Visiting Professor of Legal Studies

No funding for draft

To the Editor,

The American Friends Service Committee strongly disagrees with the appropriation by the House of Representatives of $13.3 million for military draft registration.

We have joined with six other major peace organizations in denouncing that vote and predicting widespread resistance to draft registration should attempts to reinstate it finally succeed. We were heartened to learn of the action by the governing conference of the United Methodist Church, overwhelmingly opposing draft registration.

Registration is, in fact, the draft. Make no mistake about that. That it is the first step, from which all else inexorably follows can be documented over and over again. To keep talking to the American people about "registration only" constitutes an infamous deception.

The muscle-flexing of draft registration serves only to strengthen the hawks and thus make more likely the outbreak of a devastating nuclear war from which a conscript army will be helpless to deliver us.

We will do what we can to persuade the Senate not to finance registration. The Carter Administration applied tremendous pressure on Democrats in the House. We trust that Senators will have the courage to vote their conscience in spite of White House arm-twisting.

From countless phone calls and letters we have received we know that if registration finally is funded, large numbers of young people will refuse in conscience to comply with the law. The AFSC will support those who are conscientious resisters. Some non-draft age people like myself will do our utmost to share complicity with nonregistrants.

We call upon all people concerned about the draft and the increased militarization of our society to urge their Senators to vote "No" on funding draft registration.

Sincerely you,
Frances Crowe, AFSC

Draft for freedom

To the Editor,

Everyone has something different to say about the war and the draft. Why doesn't everyone just face the facts as they stand? If our politicians, oil companies, or whoever is responsible, decide that we are going to go to war then there is nothing that you or I can do about it. You stand there and tell me that if I fight the draft then there can be no war. You, the same people who cannot even get the drinking law in your own state changed, expect to change national policy.

I may not agree with the reasons for war but if there is one I will go fight it. Although war makes little sense morally, I ask you whether you can deal with the death of your best friend who went to war while you resided in Canada.

My feelings are best expressed by a quote by John Stewart Mill, "War is an ugly thing, but not the ugliest of things. The decayed and degraded state of moral and patriotic feeling which thinks that nothing is worth war is much worse. The person who has nothing for which he is willing to fight, nothing which is more important than his own personal safety, is a miserable creature and has no chance of being free unless made and kept so by the exertions of better men than himself."

US and world hunger

To the Editor,

One person on earth out of every eight is chronically hungry and severly undernourished. The worsening situation in Cambodia is no grotesque aberration, but part of a continuing pattern of world starvation.

Why should the United States be concerned? What are the causes of hunger, and how can the causes be attacked? What can Americans do about the problem?

In June 1978, President Carter named a special commission on world hunger to attempt to answer these questions. The preliminary report of that commission, issued in December 1979, will be the focus of a study evening to be held in the front lounge of the Newman Center on N. Pleasant St., Amherst, on Tuesday April 22, 7:30 to 9:00. All interested persons are invited to attend, learn what the report recommends, hear some criticisms of the report, offer their own knowledge and opinions, and help in drawing up some questions for ourselves and those who make government policy.

On Monday, April 28, there will be an opportunity to ask those questions. Bread for the World, a Christian citizen action group concerned with changing public policy on hunger and poverty issues, will hold a community forum on world hugner at 8:00 p.m. in the recital hall of the music building, Hampshire College. Speakers will be Adele Simmons, President of Hampshire College, and a member of the Presidential Commission on World Hunger, and Representative Silvio O. Conte or his Washington aide for foreign affairs, Lisa Barry. State Representative James Collins will serve as moderator for the forum.

Something happening

There's something happening here

It's time we stop, children what's that sound
Everybody look what's going down.

The media and the government keep telling us that we've entered the post-Vietnam period. They tell us that the scars of the Vietnam War have healed, and that America can now look forward to renewed strength and respect all over the globe.

They tell us that this is 1980, that Vietnam was just a mistake, and that we've learned our lessons.

How can we believe this bullshit?

JACKSON KATZ

All you have to do is look at what's happening with the draft registration legislation in Congress and the events in Iran of the past week and you know that although the names and places have changed a bit, we haven't "learned" anything.

As young people in 1980, we're facing the same kind of stuff that young people faced in the 1960's. Except we don't have a war to deal with yet. Still, we'd better get our acts in gear, cause the shit is coming down again—and fast.

The tenth anniversary of the Kent and Jackson State shootings is coming up, and there's a commemoration on Monday here at UMass. I've heard some people say that it's nice to remember those young people who were killed, but we should try not to get nostalgic. After all, it was ten years ago...

Try telling that to the families of those kids. Try telling that to the families and friends of the more than 50,000 Americans who died in Vietnam.

There's a teach-in on The Threat of War here at UMass and at Amherst College this week, similar to the ones held all over the country during the Vietnam War. Some of the people who will be speaking and giving workshops are people who were deeply involved with the anti-war movement in the 60's—teachers, leaders, veterans, resisters.

They wre involved then, and they're involved now. What's so different?

Now, just as then, we have to educate ourselves to what's really going on. We have to stand up, ask questions, and search for the truth. We have to question authority, question what we're being told.

We can't take this stuff lightly, or think that it's not going to directly affect us. As Stephen Stills wrote almost fifteen years ago, we have to look at what's going down.

We won't get fooled again.

audio-visual with live musical theatrics that this reviewer has ever witnessed, a huge screen projected a subtly changing vision of (apparently) the road to Utopia. One by one, the Utopians, now wearing matching white Pseudo-military outfits, took the stage to play along with the melody of prerecorded caravan style music moving in time with the visuals. Playing oboe, saxophone, trumpet and tympani, the band gradually switched back to their primary instruments, climaxing with a drum solo by John Wilcox on an amazing drum-set, actually mounted on a motorcycle. John, the funny one of the group (you can tell by his sunglasses), was also the star of a short, humorous film piece which accompanied the song "You Make Me Crazy."

In his solo section, keyboard and synthesizer man Roger Powell played some impressionistic piano over recorded sequencers, accompanied, as was much of the second half, by precisely synchronized film and video images on a giant screen behind the band.

Murray lives up to Thompson in 'Where the Buffalo Roam'

By ROBERT B. CARGILL
Collegian Staff

If Hunter Thompson is anything like the mad journalist Where the Buffalo Roam depicts him as, then one can certainly guess why he's infamously labelled Doctor Gaozo.

Bill Murray stars as Dr. Hunter S. Thompson, probably the most notoriously inexplicable writer in American journalism in this wacky comedy that frantically exploits the state of lunacy, both Murray's and the real Dr. Thompson's.

Where the Buffalo Roam mercilessly bombards us with alcohol, drugs, and rock 'n roll; makes use of the same boisterous humor employed in "Animal House;" and inevitably presents Murray as the classic comedic hero of the "mad-dog" culture he truly represents. Ultimately though, its saving grace is that it is based on fact, and is not simply another contrived concoction of filmic nonsense.

Produced and directed by Art Linson, and co-starring Peter Boyle, this film exemplifies Thompson's wild adventures, revealing not only his zaniness, but his downright obnoxiousness to his innocent colleagues as well. Though his exploits are rather harmless in themselves, his loud manner of expression and physical means of communicating prove more than disturbing to his fellow journalists, whose collective presence appears terribly conventional in stark constrast to Thompson's.

On business trips, Thompson crudely takes advantage of expense accounts in order to satisfy his manical desire for enjoyment. If he's not being fed Wild Turkey intravenously, he is either popping pills or smoking joints (or both), while a good portion of his travel time is spent slurping on grapefruits splashed with vodka.

Where the Buffalo Roam is all Bill Murray and in turn, Murray is all Hunter Thompson. The movie itself deserves few artistic honors besides those for the unrestrained performance of Murray, whose constant ridiculousness is similar to that of a Steve Martin or John Belushi. Murray's is a "no-holes-barred" performance, unrelenting and consistent in its level of calculated absurdity, discharged as could only a vetern of "Saturday Night Live"!

Where the Buffalo Roam is now playing at the Hampsire Mall cinemas.

Cuban refugees swarm Florida coast

Associated Press

KEY WEST, Fla. — More waves of refugees mixed with convicts released from Cuban prisons swarmed ashore here yesterday as the Carter administration worked to negotiate an airlift to replace the illegal boat convoy between the United States and Cuba.

More than 5,000 Cuban refugees have sailed to Florida since the "Freedom Float" began last week. In the past two days alone, about 1,500 refugees checked in at the swamped processing center here.

Coast Guard air surveillance yesterday showed that dozens of ships had set out from the Cuban port of Mariel to take advantage of calm waters in the Florida Straits after three days of rough weather. An additional 200 boats left Key West yesterday, bound for Cuba.

But dozens of Cuban-Americans who rented or

Victor Palmieri, the president's refugee coordinator, said he was "trying to activate diplomatic channels" between Washington, Havana and other Latin bought boats in a rush to get their relatives wound up ferrying refugees picked by the Castro government or coming back empty-handed after refusing to bring back refugees they didn't know.

Eglin served as a processing point for thousands of Vietnamese refugees who came to the United States in the 1970s.

Jury finds Bert Lance innocent after 2 years

ALANTA — Former budget director Bert Lance, whose forced departure from the federal government left President Carter close to tears, was found innocent yesterday on nine counts of bank fraud.

The jury deliberated nine days. At one time, as many as 10 of the 12 jurors voted to convict Lance on two counts of making false financial statements to a bank, one juror said after the acquittal.

Lance was "delighted" by the outcome but said the two-year investigation and 16-week trial were "a total, abject and ridiculous waste of taxpayers' money."

Holyoke thief believed drowned, police say

HOLYOKE — A man wanted for unarmed robbery who jumped into a canal Tuesday while fleeing police was missing and presumed drowned, police said yesterday.

Officers said that when they spotted 37-year-old Santiago Diaz in downtown Holyoke on Tuesday afternoon he ran away.

Police said that after a brief chase Diaz jumped into one of the city's industrial canals and began swimming across. But whn Diaz spotted an officer on the side toward which he was swimming he stopped, tried to turn back but struggled and sank underwater.

Police specualted Diaz was pulled under by the canal's stron spring current.

Soviet-US delegates hit with red paint

UNITED NATIONS — Two young men shouting radical slogans walked into the U.N. Security Council chamber yesterday and splattered the American and Soviet delegates with red paint.

The paint reddened U.S. Deputy Chief Delegate William vanden Heuvel's neck and almost completely covered the face of Soviet Ambassador Oleg A. Troyanosky. Witnesses said they shouted, "May Day!" and "Our flag is red, not red, white and blue: Down with Soviet-American war moves!"

Secretary-General Kurt Waldheim immediately ordered an investigation of the incident, which occurred as the council was about to convene to consider a Tunisian resolution calling for a Palestinian state.

Swedish unions wage worst strike

STOCKHOLM, Sweden—Trade Unions turned down a last-minute salary offer by government-appointed mediators, and the Swedish Federation of Employers announced it would lock out 800,000 workers today.

Selective strikes called by the Confederation of Trade Unions will affect another 100,000 workers in what is shaping up as the worst labor dispute in the nation's history.

Unions representing 2.2 million blue-collar workers and 1.3 million government white-collar employees are demanding pay hikes of about 11 percent. The mediators offered 2.3 percent.

Community Organizing Positions:

The Connecticut Citizen Action Group, one of the Northeast's most effective state-wide citizen organizations, is looking to add several additional staff positions. Organizers and researchers are needed to work on such issues as: housing, taxes, public safety, energy, hazardous waste, and transportation. Salaries start at $7,000 and are negotiable. Interviews for these positions will be held on campus Tuesday, May 13th, call Karen Sibley at the Placement Office for an appointment 545-2224 or after the 13th call Miles at CCAG-203-527-7191.

Gym extravaganza slated for tonight

The UMass men's and women's gymnastics teams will be performing in a Gymextravaganza tonight and tomorrow at 7:30 p.m. in the Boyden Auxiliary Gymnasium.

Special guests tonight will be the Locomotion Vaudeville Theatre, a troupe that provides a theatrical production of acrobatic movements, circus artistry, characters and comic situations from the vaudeville era.

Tomorrow night, UMass junior Robert Donahue will attempt to make the Guinness Book of World Records for time standing on his hands.

"We're hoping for a good turnout," UMass men's gymnastics coach Roy Johnson said. "The performance should be very entertaining, and it will give our kids a chance to show what they can do without the pressure of competing against another team and being judged."

Raffle tickets for various prizes will be on sale at the door.

Laxwomen eye Regionals

By MAUREEN SULLIVAN
Collegian Staff

By the time the UMass women's lacrosse team returns from its last regular season game against Yale University tonight, it will learn of its seeding in the regionals. UMass will venture to Darmouth College this weekend with either the first or second seed.

Sounds a bit overconfident? It isn't, considering the following tidbits.

First, UMass has a 9-0 record. Its victories include New England Poll members Harvard University, University of New Hampshire and University of Rhode Island. Throughtout its season, UMass scored 117 goals while giving up just 24. On the average, the Gazelles tallied 13 goals per game and let through 2.6 goals per contest.

Second, the Gazelles are the defending Regionals champion. At Yale last year, UMass rolled over Brown University, UNH and Yale to take the crown.

Third, the Gazelles have much the same staff as last year, plus some personnel who provide UMass an extra punch to both offense and defense.

In addition to seniors Jean Hackett and Cari Nickerson, freshman Whitney Thayer has scored more than 20 goals for the Gazelles; she leads the team with 27 goals, followed by Nickerson with 23 and Hackett with 21. Senior Julie McHugh and sophomore Margie Anderson are the other Gazelles with double-digit figures, McHugh having 12 tallies and Anderson scoring 11 times.

Defensively, the line is strong, if not the most dominating aspect of the squad. Sophomores Judy Strong, Maria Minicucci and Holly Jennings, with junior Patti Bossio and senior Laura O'Neil, form a defensive net around goalie Robin Jennings that lately has proved strong and tight. Since the 24-5 blowout of Williams College, the defense has paced the Gazelles to narrow victories over Harvard (6-4), URI (3-2) and UNH (8-4). Stealing ball and fire from the other team, the defense assisted the UMass offense to score and eventually to win.

Fourth, UMass has been very successful against its opponents' zone defense, especially against the "ring around the crease" some teams established against the speed of the UMass offense. While some zones did not work well because some of the opposition did nothing except stand around the goalie and not to come after the ball-cradler, UMass' flexibility and speed couldn't be held back for long.

Speaking of flexibility, the UMass line-up for each game changes frequently, as UMass coach Pam Hixon tries out different players in different positions. Whomever played center in the first half becomes an attack wing in the second stanza, while that wing swings over to a home position near the opposing goal, etc. Sometimes the changes happen just before gametime, without the changes made on the roster. O, thank God for offical rosters.....can't tell the name from the number without one.

Whatever the roster, UMass has come this far, and plans to go farther. After the Regionals come the Nationals in Princeton University on the weekend of May 10. If the Gazelles survive Dartmouth this weekend, Princeton and the National title will be one definite step closer.

NFL likes 6 NE'ers

FOXBORO, Mass. (AP) — Nine players for New England colleges, including three from Boston College, were selected during the two-day National Football League draft which ended yesterday.

Six of the players were picked yesterday during the final six rounds of the 12-round draft.

In the eighth round, the New York Jets took Eagle linebacker Jeff Dzima. A pair of Boston College offensive guards was picked Tuesday. Buffalo tapped John Schmeding in the third round, and Green Bay went for Kal Swanke in the sixth round.

Schmeding sat out the first eight games of last season with a torn muscle and was redshirted the previous season when he suffered from a bad back.

"I think Schmeding is just an awesome specimen," said Boston College Coach Ed Chlebek. "He's big and strong and he can run. His ability to play guard or tackle will really help him."

"Swanke is a great athlete and he has everything ahead of him. He can still fill out physically," Chlebek added. "Dzima is a guy who's going to go down there and play. Learning the techniques is one of his strong points.

"I think all three of them will stick in the pros."

Three other New Englanders were chosen in the eighth round: Ken Hill, a Yale running back, by Oakland, which projected him as a defensive back; Sam Stepney, a Boston University linebacker, by Kansas City, and Ted Walton, a Connecticut defensive back, by Pittsburgh.

In the 10th round, Cincinnati took Massachusetts placekicker Sandro Vitiello, and in the 12th round, Buffalo went for tight end Roger Lapham of Maine.

The first New Englander taken in the draft was Brown offensive tackle John Sinnott, chosen by St. Louis in the second round.

First kicker selected

Vitiello chosen by Bengals

By STEVE COOPERMAN
Collegian Staff

UMass senior Sandro Vitiello was selected in the tenth round of yesterday's second, and last, day of the national Football League's college draft by the Cincinnati Bengals.

Vitiello was the first kicker selected in the draft. Two other kickers were selected in the twelfth round, Randy Bielski of Towson Sate by the Baltimore Colts, and Mike Lansford of the University of Washington by the New York Giants.

Vitiello learned of his selection when contacted yesterday afternoon by a Cincinnati representative directly directly from the site of the draft in New York. The representative, according to Vitiello, "seemed pretty positive" that the kicker would be given a legitimate shot at making the team.

The Bengals, who finished with a 4-12 record last season, have used former Penn State star Chris Bahr as their placekicker the previous four seasons. But Bahr's 1979 preformance reportedly was a disappointing one.

"Their (the Bengals) kicker had a bad year—the fans were booing him by the end of the season," Vitiello said yesterday. "I think I have a good chance to make the team."

Several teams had been in touch with Vitiello prior to the draft, but Cincinnati was not one of them. Vitiello said that for this reason, "I was really shocked" by the selection.

The UMass senior said he will report to the team's mini-camp for rookies to be held May 9-12 in Cincinnati.

Ironically, the kicker at Penn State before Bahr, the man Vitiello will have to beat out, was Vitiello's brother Albert. And, like Vitiello, Bahr has a kicking brother: Matt Bahr was a rookie for the Super Bowl champion Pittsburgh Steelers last season.

Vitiello, who transfered to UMass from Nassau (N.Y.) Community College, finished his career here as the all-time leading placekicker in the school's history. in two years, he made 20 of 22 extra point atempts and 29 of 51 field goal attempts, 22 of 28 from within the 40-yard line.

Vitiello is a left-footed soccer-style kicker but can also kick right-footed. In a 1978 game against Rhode Island, the sports management major booted two field goals and an extra point right-footed because of injury to his left leg.

The UMass men's golf team finished with a two-day team total of 661 to grab the fifth place trophy in the 38-team New England Tournament Monday and Tuesday in Mashpee, Mass.

The Minutemen, who combined a first round effort of 335 at Cape Cod C.C. with a second round score of 326 at New Seabury C.C., finished 28 shots behind the tournament winner, Central Connecticut (633). Bryant College finished second with 646, Salem State third with 649 and the University of Hartford fourth with 653.

Tony Kelley led the Minutemen attack, shooting fine scores of 77 and 79 for a 156 finish third individually. However, Kelley's efforts were overshadowed by Hartford's Keith Gollenberg, who fired rounds of 75 and 76 for two-day total of 151 to capture the individual medalist honors. Jim Hallet of Bryant was second with 77-76-153.

UMass captian Mark Duggan finished close behind Kelley with scores of 83 and 81 for a 164. Senior Bob Robichaud was next in line for the Minutemen with 88-82-170. Bob Gladchuk and Rich Murphy both chipped in with 177 to round out the UMass scoring. Gladchuk had scores of 87 and 90 while Murphy skied to 93 before coming down to an 84.

The UMass effort was excellent considering that the team was competing in a field of 38 teams and 190 golfers without the services of two regulars, Marty Hunt and Steve Mielitun. Both did not make the trip due to academic priorities.

Suit filed in transcript case

U.S. Attorney levels mail fraud and conspiracy charges

By MARC FAGELSON
and ED LEVINE
Collegian Staff

U.S. Attorney George Kelly yesterday filed a suit in U.S. District Court in Springfield charging Scott Trask with mail fraud and conspiracy to commit mail fraud in connection with the falsifying of UMass transcripts.

Trask, a Dennisport resident who is not a UMass student, was arrested yesterday morning and released on a $5,000 non-surety bond by Judge Frank H. Freedman. The date has not been set for a probable cause hearing, the next step in the federal process.

Trask alledgedly paid UMass student Stephen B. Taylor $990 for a transcript indicating that Trask had graduated from UMass in May, 1979 with a 3.4 cumulative grade point average in mechanical engineering. Trask, however, never attended UMass.

According to an affadavit filed in federal court. Trask and Taylor attended the same high school and graduated one year apart.

Last Monday, federal authorities discovered office supplies, envelopes bearing the UMass records office return address, rubber stamps and student profile worksheets in Taylor's apartment. Taylor had been a student employee in the records office but withdrew from school "within the last week" said Paul Yamowitch, assistant to Dean of Students William F. Field.

Kelly would not comment on the possibility of charges being filed against Taylor.

The Trask transcript contained courses which were "virtually identical" to those which appeared in the transcript of 1979 graduate Norman F. Brown, Kelly said. Brown's transcript had been missing from the transcript office until the investigation.

Disciplinary action against Taylor will not be taken by the University until the court case is finished, Yanowitch said. Because the rules of evidence are less stringent in a University disciplinary case than in the courts, evidence may not be obtained by the University, because it could not be used against Taylor in court.

Since Taylor has left UMass, however, the University is powerless to take any action against him unless he attempts to re-enroll in school, Yanowitch added.

But Taylor's was not the only falsified transcript, Kelly said. A. Ross Davidson, a UMass student who changed his name last March from Abbott Davidson, falsified his transcript when he changed his name, Kelly said.

Davidson has two transcripts; one for each name, Kelly said. Davidson dropped out of UMass in May, 1979 and allegedly changed his name in order to get a new transcript. On his active, A. Ross Davidson transcript, he is a former drop-out now attending classes.

But on his falsified transcript, under his old name, Davidson graduated last year Magna Cum Laude in Political Science, Kelly said. The transcript under Davidson's old name was issued to a student number that does not exist, he added.

"The inactive transcript is a dummy," Kelly said. Although he changed his name, Davidson has access to both transcripts.

Funding runs out for food stamps; students affected

By BRIAN O'CONNELL
Collegian Staff

Over 1200 UMass students and 460,000 Massachusetts residents face a "foodless" summer unless Congress appropriates more money for the nationwide Food Stamp Program by May 15, a University official said yesterday.

UMass Food Stamp Office supervisor Julie Keating said federal funding for the program has "run out" placing many nationwide recipients in a position where they may not be able to afford to buy food this summer.

According to a statement released by the Boston-based Coalition For Basic Human Needs, an independent group lobbying for the needed funding, Congress placed a cap on the amount of federal money to be spent on the Food Stamp Program. Earmarked for the program was $6.2 billion, the statement said. Since, then, the skyrocketing rise of food prices has caused the program "to spend up to the cap months before the (fiscal)year had even ended, a Coalition spokesman said yesterday.

Keating could not say how much additional funding was needed to finish out the fiscal year.

According to Keating, Congress has until May 15 to vote on the extra appropriations, adding she "didn't know" the outcome of that vote.

Even if the extra appropriations are approved, UMass students may not be able to get food stamps in the future.

A group of senators and congressmen in Washington have included an amendment in the proposed 1981 Food Stamp Program budget that would exclude the majority of students from receiving food stamp aid in 1981, Keating said. The only exceptions would include students going to school part-time, disabled students or students who are heads of households.

Koffler gives endorsement to Women Studies major, calls for trustee approval

By JANE DEVIRGILIO
Collegian Staff

UMass Chancellor Henry Koffler yesterday approved a two-year-old recommendation of the Faculty Senate to make the UMass Women's Studies program an independent major.

Koffler sent the recommendation to UMass president Kavid C. Knapp and the UMass Board of Trustees for final approval with "strong endorsement."

A representative from President Knapp's office in Boston yesterday denied comment on what Knapp's decision on the recommendation might be, saying Knapp had not yet seen the Chancellor's exact recommendation.

Women's Studies Staff Assistant Arlen Avakian said students and faculty were elated they "can finally do the work of the program" without the constant problem of University recognition. Koffler stated, in the memorandum announcing his approval, however, that there is "no commitment for either expansion of the program or additional resources."

In fact, the program will have to maintain a tight budget in face of further possible University budget cuts.

Koffler also requested the program "make every effort" to be placed under a dean within a college despite the interdesciplinary nature of the program.

Women Studies began as a pilot program in 1974. Its authority to grant an independent degree continued for the past two years and was initially approved by Provost Jerry Allen and then Chancellor Randolph Bromery. The problem of additional resources for the program also arose at that time.

Wants to attend GOP convention

Student runs as Anderson delegate

By JACK GALLAGER
Collegian Staff

Paul "Tim" Walter Jr., a part-time UMass graduate student in Engligh, wants to be a delegate to the Republican National Convention for John Anderscn. And though his nomination isn't certain, he hasn't "heard of any opposition" to his nomination.

Beginning at 1 pm tomorrow at Smith College's Wright Hall, Walter will begin to know where he stands-- whether his delegation is certain.

Tomorrow is the GOP 1st Congressional District Caucus.

Walter says he wants to be a delegate "to instigate floor fights" on issues, such as military draft registration and pro-choice on abortions, that he thinks are important. "In one sense, we're (Anderson delegates) going to provide entertainment" at the National Convention, he says.

Stumping for Anderson since February, Walter was asked to be Berkshire County coordinator for Anderson; he accepted. A while ago, he was asked by Anderson's people to run as a delegate for the GOP-turned-independent Presidential candidate. And he accepted that, too.

Admitting he is "fairly apolitical," Walter says his relationship to politics has been one of love-hate. He is dismayed, for instance, that Ronald Reagan, who gained 23 percent of the popular vote in the 1st districs, gets one delegate in the districs. Anderson also won one delegate in the district, though gaining 34 percent of the popular vote.

Further, if a delegate is voted in at the caucus tomorrow for a certian candidate and the candidate's people don't like the delegate, then that delegate can be "vetoed" and a more suitable candidate can be appointed, provided he is the next highest vote getter at the caucus. This process can continue until a delegate to the candidate's liking is nominated, and Walter considers this foolish.

Walter says he was opposed to Anderson's independent candidacy at first, admitting it is a long-shot. Anderson's best chances, Walter says, lie in Massachusetts, Connecticut and Vermont-- while Rhode Island is an outside possibility. Those states represent a "good block of electoral votes," Walter says, which could cause problems for the other GOP candidates at the National Convention.

If nominated, Walter says he will push for doing away with the alternate system for the National Convention and seek opinions from those he could be elected to represent in the district.

House rejects defense boost

WASHINGTON [AP] The House yesterday handily rejected an amendment to boost 1981 defense spending by $5.1 billion despite claims that the money was needed to avert future military failures, such as the ill-fated Iranian rescue attempt.

The 246-164 vote was an important victory for President Carter and House Democratic leaders who had lobbied heavily against the higher defense spending.

The amendment lost despite its sponsor, Rep. Marjorie S. Holt, R-Md., invoking the memory of the aborted Iranian rescue attempt that claimed the lives of eight American servicemen.

"A heroic mission became a tragedy," Mrs. Holt declared. "If we are to ask our military to make these kinds of missions, we must support them."

Agent Orange info. available by phone

WASHINGTON [AP] A toll-free telephone number has been established for veterans to call for information on possible damage to health of servicemen exposed to the herbicide Agent Orange in Vietnam.

A group called Vietnam Veterans of America said callers to 800-424-5402 will hear a recording advising them on Agent Orange, on what to ask for at a Veterans Administration hospital and how to apply for disability payments.

Callers from the District of Columbia should call 466-2244.

In addition, according to Steve Champlain, Washington coordinator of the group, veterans who call the number will be asked to participate in an epidemiological study of the health of veterans who suspect they have been exposed.

A Ford Foundation grant will help pay the cost of running the service, Champlain said.

Koffler, students meet in Pierpont at informal tea

By SEAN HARVEY
Collegian Staff

"I've enjoyed my first year at UMass very much," Chancellor Koffler said yesterday afternoon during an informal tea in Pierpont dormitory lounge.

Koffler, who came at the request of Head of Residence Gary Throop, rapped for about 50 minutes with residents of the dorm over tea and cookies.

A sophomore complained he couldn't get into four courses in the School of Business Administration that he was signed up for because they were over subscribed.

"I'm familiar with that type of situation," Koffler said. "It's very frustrating. I've been trying to get more money for SBA."

Another student asked Koffler what he thought about the proposed G-core.

"I want to offer educational opportunities that are broad so people can find themselves within that discipline," he said. "I'm not sure attitudes are created in courses on attitudes."

In response to a question about formation of a Resident Assistant Union, Koffler said this is a free country and if the RA's want to get together to protest, they're free to do so.

Koffler was particularly concerned with what students thought of their educational experience at UMass.

"I love this school," a freshman said, "but I'm bothered by our reputation in-state."

"We have suffered from headlines journalists think people want to read," Koffler said. "The fact is a large percentage of the students accepted here make this their first choice."

He went on to say that a lot of people in the state think very highly of UMass. He called an article last year in Boston Magazine dealing with UMass a case of "unadulterated yellow journalism."

Koffler was congratulated by Martha Price, a Women's Studies major, on his approval of the Women's Studies major. (See story, page 1).

"I'm very pleased with your decision," she said. "Women's Studies should be as important as any other major."

When presented with a Pierpont t-shirt by Throop, Koffler quirped "I shall treasure it and wear it tomorrow morning, in

No way to win nuclear war, Columbia professor says

By JIM DEGNIM
Collegian Staff

Author and armaments expert Seymour Melman told an estimated 350 persons in the Campus Center Auditorium last night, "For the first time, the human condition includes the prospect of no future."

Speaking at the opening session of a three-day teach-in, "The Threat of War", Melman said, "There is no conceivable way to win a nuclear war. When you win, you lose through the consequences of the act."

Melman, an industrial engineering professor from Columbia University, called the draft "The ultimate exploitation."

"There isn't much beyond taking a human life," he said.

Melman blamed the present economic problems in the United States on the military economy. "The permanent war economy has become the prime source of the inflation and unemployment we now endure," Melman said. He said that the military provided market for goods where producers didn't have to worry about keeping cost down.

The U.S., Melman said, is "in the grips of a state religion. The flag is an idol, the President is a high priest, and the military is an acolyte."

The purpose of the teach-in, co-sponsored by the Campus Center Program Council and the Student-Faculty Organizing Committee, is to respond to the "Renewed militarism, the growing threat to world peace and to the confusion generated by the multitude of interpretations of what is really happening today and why," Judy Weiss, a UMass student, said. "It is our responsibility to educate ourselves."

UMass anthropology professor Johnnetta Cole recited a list of what she called "believe-it-or-not realities. "We (the United States) are number one in sheer, naked, unadulterated destructive power," Cole said. "But we are twenty-sixth in life expectancy of children, eighteenth in doctor-to-person ratio, fifteenth in literacy and fifteenth in infant mortality."

Prof. Seymour Melman of Columbia University

The hisory of the draft, Cole said, is one of women, minorities and the young protecting the "economic interests of a small group of silly men." Women, minorities and the young are "the hostages of Mr. Carter's military budget," Cole said.

Weiss urged people to "write or call your Senator" to voice opposition to draft registration. "The government has tried to make us forget Vietnam, but we will not and can not forget," she said. Weiss bemoaned spending on the military over social services. "We need low-income housing, not housing for death in the shape of an MX missile," she said.

UMass student Jackson Katz called draft registration "a key part in the increasing militarism in our society."

Better programming, inside improvements lift Wall's business

By DAVID FERRO
Special to the Collegian

Since the drinking age in Massachusetts was raised to 20 last spring, sales at the Bluewall, the popular watering hole in the Campus Center, have decreased by 50 percent, but improvements are continuing to bolster business, according to Campus Center Cirector William Harris.

The bar had lost $500,000 but improved programming has increased sales and improvements such as renovation will continue to increase them, Harris said. A wrist band system, to help identify those old enough to drink, will aslo be implemented this fall, he added.

The programming has improved considerably since students have been given a bigger hand in locating and booking acts for the Bluewall, Harris said. this has been going on since last fall.

"I've always believed students should be more involved in programming since the're the ones who know what they want," he said.

UMass student Jay Blue, who along with Nancy Seraphin books bands for the Bluewall in conjunction with the Union Program Council, said the improved programming has provided a shot in the arm to the bar.

"We're getting up to 500 people for an act on a regular basis where before we were getting seven or eight," Blue said.

Blue said he scouted New England looking for bands which he felt would appeal to UMass student.

"With the prestige of UPC, I've been able to get really good acts for a reasonable amount," he said. "To improve programming we have brought in not only good local

Last day to get tickets

Today is the last day students can pick up their tickets for this year's Spring Concert.

The tickets are being distributed free of charge to all UMass undergraduate students who have paid their student Activities Tax Fee. The tickets may be picked up between 9 a.m. and 4 p.m. outside the third floor of the Campus Center.

Guest tickets are also being sold for $15 each at the Fine Arts Center Box Office.

The concert, which will feature the Allman Brothers, Bonnie Raitt and a third band yet to be announced, will be held in Alumni Stadium on Saturday, May 10.

Board of Governors elects next year's officers

By MICHAEL FOLEY
Collegian Staff

The Campus Center Board of Governors last night elected Curtiss Wohlers as chairperson, Martha Casey as vic-chair and Tim Jingezian as Treasurer for next year.

Wholers said as chairperson he would "create closer ties to the Undergraduate Senate and Graduate Senate. I will continue to support student-run businesses and coops," he said.

Martha Casey, a communications studies junior accepting the vice-chair position vowed to become involved in the renovations going on in the Campus Center and Student Union.

In other action last night, the Board approved a revision of their constituion that would increase the number of Board seats reserved to various minority groups from three to six.

These positions could be filled by representatives of the Third World community, the handicapped, elderly, veterans, women, homosexuals, international students and peer persons, with the provison that no sigle group get more than three of the six positions, according to the amendment.

Martha Casey

The wording "Vietnam-era veteran" was changed to "Veteran" after some discussion. John Furbish, chair of the Constituion Committee accepted the ammendment to his proposal "out of consideration for the future."

Mr. Harris questioned the Board's recruitment efforts with concerns to filling the minority positions calling for "a more effective approach" when the fact that the three original minority positions remain unfilled was brought out by Wohlers.

The Board last night, also discussed the whereabouts of 276 tapes worth $1,586 earmarked for the Music Listenm Room in the Campus Center. The new tapes were carefully selected by Jay Blue and Nancy Seraphin of the Union Program Council over intersession based on a list of requests. The tapes were purchased from Union Records Unlimited, the student coop in the Student Union Building which had the lowest bid.

According to a receiving report the tapes arrived March 6. But they have yet to be filed in the Music Library.

Wohlers said the Music Library was "infrequently staffed" and handled irresponsibly and ineffeciently. "The operation down there is pretty slip-shod, Wohlers said.

Seraphin said "The place is very poorly run. The fact that it is always packed shows that it should be sufficiently staffed."

Wholers noted the tapes represent a "major purchase of the Board" and many students have asked him when they will be available.

Commentary

This appeal is written to express our concerns about the G.Q./Breakwater concert to be held this Saturday, May 3, 1980.

This concert is the end result of a year long negotiation between the Union Program Council (UPC) and the Duke Ellington Committee. During this time we have attempted to bring several artists to the campus (ie. Angie Bofill, The Whispers and Crusaders) but for various reasons such as booking dates, finances and outside competition we have been unable to contract these acts. Therfore G.-Q./Breakwater represents the culmination of our efforts to bring a contemporary Third World act to our campus.

This concert also represents the beginning of UPC programming for large contemporary acts of a Third World content (r&b, funk, salsa, soul). These concerts will augment the programming of Black Classical Music which has consistently been occurring.

Now that we have seemingly settled our differences with UPC we have encountered another problem. Our constituents (the Third World community) have shown a half-hearted support for our first concert. We need all of your support for several reasons. First, UPC has expressed a deep concern over booking large Third World acts on campus because they feel there isn't a large enough following in the area to make Third World concerts financially advantageous. Secondly, lack of participation in programming on campus has led UPC to believe that the Third World community isn't supportive enough to back future programming of this kind on campus. Thirdly, the Ellington Committee is committed to Third World programming.

A good number of you have approached members of the Ellington Committee and have asked to work either security or ushering for the G.Q. concert. However, everyone cannot work the show. We need people to buy tickets and increase the revenue of the show. We regret and sympathize with you over the price of tickets. However, when ticket prices were established we were not consulted and UPC used their own rock concert standards to set ticket cost.

A hand full of us have done all the negotating, booking, footwork and planning to make sure that the Third World community receives its fair share of programming. We, as the Duke Ellington Committee do not appreciate the apathy, complaints and non-support that has surfaced in the last few weeks. We have received constant gripes and complaints about the lack of Third World Programming of this kind. People claim that there is too much Black Classical music and not enough funk. Yet, when given the opportuity to support the first concert of this nature, the complaints and gripes continue. If it isn't complaints about the ticket prices, it's complaints aobut the artists. But if a similar concert were given in Springfield or Boston, people find gas money, herb money and ticket money to get there. You support others but you can't support us!

All we want is your support. This is your spring concert so come out and support it!

Editorial Progress or Politics

During his two day visit to our campus last Monday and Tuesday Andrew Young tooted Carter's horn. He did this so effectively in fact that some of us may have been left with the impression that President Carter is the best thing that has happened to Blacks politically in quite some time.

It is obvious to me that Andrew Young came to the UMass campus to solicit support for Carter's bid for a second term.

But the question that must now be asked is this: were Young's contentions about the state of the Black man in this country and in others based on fact or were they rather based on his own loyalty to the Carter administration and to the democratic party?

When Young claims that there has been "more progress in Africa in the past three years than in the past decade" he probably speaks the truth. To what and to whom can we attribute these African strides toward freedom? Can we attribute it to the Carter administration's new view on human rights? Can we attribute it to Andrew Young's winning diplomacy? I think not. If there have been any accomplishments in Africa they must be attributed to the consistent, political and armed struggle of the African people.

But let us come home to America and examine what the Carter Administration has done for Blacks here. The administration boasts about the many appointments it has made in the area of Black administrators. Is this any more than what we should have expected as our rightful due, given this country's supposed commitment to Affirmative action?

Please do not misunderstand me. I am not minimizing the importance of Blacks in government but I want to point out that Carter has not done enough. He has not changed significantly the economic status or the social conditions of the majority of Blacks in this country. The truth of the matter is that there is a trend toward greater disparity between the incomes of white and Black Americans. The trend has neither been reversed or even slowed during the three and one half years of the Carter administration.

Young claims that Black income has received an across the board increase in the past decade, but so has the cost of living. We cannot equate across the board increases in income with success in terms of civil rights when there is still evidence that the Black man and the white man are not treated equally in the job market.

In my view, Young tended to minimize the legitimate concerns of Black people in this country today.

In speaking of this country's increasingly obvious swing to the right Young said "It is not that the country is going conservative, the young people didn't support liberal leadership,' he said. My contention is that the young, the oppressed and the dissenters of this country are very dissatisfied with the liberal leadership and in fact believe that there is not much difference between the liberal politician and the conservative politician.

The Ku Klux Klan to Andrew Yong are "made up by and large of poor whites" who have been left out of the economic and social advances of the past decades. These poor whites have begun to see the advances of Black people as taking away something from them.

Young's advice to Black people in how to deal with the Klan is law enforcement. He asserts that the government's role in relation to the Klan is one of law enforcement.

Now Youngs analysis sounds all well and good when it is put into eloquent phrases and spoken from a microphone behind a podium at the Fine Arts Center, but Black people know from personal experience that the existence of the Klan cannot be written off as a bunch of poor hoodlum white folks that feel left out of things. Such whites may make up the rank and file of the Klan but the Klans political ties reach much higher than hoodlumism.

What has historically been the case and what is the case in 1980 is that the Government official, the law enforcement agent and the Klansman is often one and same white man.

I realize that Carter cannot be blamed for all of the difficulties that the white man faces nor can he be expected to solve all of the problems in four years but there are ways that Carter can prove the new attitudes towards human rights that his staff brags about.

His recent budget does not reflect this commitment as he has increased military spending at the expense of the expansion of health care programs, job programs for disadvantaged youths and other humanistic programs.

If Carter wants my vote let him send jobs to my community. Let him begin to effectively tackle the problems of South Africa instead of supporting the racist regimes that oppress my African brothers.

Support Black Affairs. We need staff for next semester!!

Food for Thought

The Duke Ellington Music Committee has had a long struggle in establishing their reputation on campus. Reasons for this can be attributed to two problems.

First, the committee has been haunted by the May 1978 Duke Ellington Spring Concert. The concert was marred by low attendance (less than 3,000) people in the stadium). The damaging part of the low attendance, was the general attitude of the students in their lack of appreciation for the talent. This was the failure of the concert organizers to educate the UMass campus, on the new approach of the Spring Concert (Duke Ellington Concert). This proved to be a vital point in the attendance figures.

Another problem associated with the low attendance was the confusion among support groups. The Student Senate and Union Program Council (UPC) are also responsible for putting on the Spring Concert. The UPC organization has to advise the Senate, on talent and the probablilty of a successful concert. The Senate finances the concert and determines all final options to insure the success of the concert. Because of this dual checking process, it would seem that the students best interest is being protected. But this was not the case, because the leadership (Senate, UPC and concert organizers) could not address vital questions concerning the success fo this concert.

One problem related to the final allocations of the concert, especiall when it was apparent that Stevie Wonder would not appear for the Spring Concert, the original committment of $77,000 was no longer being considered. In fact, the figures changed numerous times before a final figure was agreed upon. A second problem was the question of the Ellington Foundation. The agreement, based on the proceeds from the concert, would establish a foundation for Duke Ellington in New York, and that the University would have a library component on this campus. Unfortunately, the library proposal was not told to the Senate or the Third World community in the origianl plans and caused some wild speculations on the whole operation. A third problem was the missing signature of Mercer Ellington, who was due to perform in the concert and would officially set up the Foundation. The missing signature on a particular form raised speculation of the existence of the Foundation.

A fourth area was the failure of the concert organizers to secure a charter for the foundation. The fifth mistake was the failure of the concert organizers to gather administrative support in establishing a board of directors.

Thus, the combination fo these problems, had placed enough doubts in the minds of the average students and their representatives (Student Senate, other area reps., UPC and members of the Third World community), that the outcome of the concert was not successful. Because of the overwhelming conviction by the campus at large, it produced a large deficit (in excess of $20,000), low attendance, and left a negative feeling toward future Third World concerts.

But the obstacles in the past that impaired the progress of the Duke Ellington Committee did not destroy the spirit of the group. Instead, it allowed the organization to strengthen their weaknesses by seeking new personnel and developing a community concept for concerts. The new reorganization plan helped in two distinct areas.

First, most of the concerts in the past had little community input. The new plan called for an improvement in communication between the Duke Ellington Committee and the Third World community. Examples of this process was the extensive use of direct verbal surveys taken by the committee from organizers and community members. Another imporvement was the increased use of radio and newspapers in seeking new members and informing the community of future happenings. Another angle was securing members who had a wide range of skills in the music field and showed concern in improving the image of concerts for the ThirdWorld community.

The second approach of the reorganizational plan, was to bring music that would appeal to the UMass population. The Ellington Committee was able to bring up Phyllis Hyman in the Spring of '79 which proved to be a strong example of their new consciousness. Another trait of their new plan produced the Spring Duke Ellington Music Series labelled "Solos and Duos". This program gave the organization their biggest success picture of the year. The response of the UMass population has been very appreciative of the talents introduced in this program. Especially, when we consider that an overflowing crowd of nearly two hundred people in the Cape Cod lounge viewed the talents of Kenny Barron and Buster Williams in April. The series has one more concert with Chico Freedman and Cecil McBee on Friday, May 9th, and the success emphasizes the dedication of the group in being responsive to the UMass student body.

The final example of the Duke Ellington Music Committee to improve their community concept from the past is the concert on May 3rd with GQ and Breakwater. The frustrations of getting talent that would bring out the majority of the Third World community was one of the main problems the group had to overcome.

The Black Man's cornrows

For many of centuries the white man has not only discredited the many accomplishments of the Black man, but has tried to take credit himself. There are many examples of this in art, dance, music, food and other cultural aspects of the Black man. The one that has really gotten me pissed off is, the white man or woman I should say, taking credit for the traditional Black cornrow.

Since the movie "Ten", white folks have not only taken credit for cornrows, but have turned our tradition into a fad. Which is now known to them, as the"Bo Derek" look, the Ten look, or what I would call the Pretend look (obviously they are going through a serious identity crisis).

In certain areas of the Pioneer Valley whites who have learned to cornrow from Blacks, are teaching other whites to cornrow their hair, but this is not really cornrow, due to the fact that cornrows are not cornrows unless they are a top a brother or sister's head.

Rally by pond

On Monday May 5 from noon to 2 p.m. by the campus pond there will be a rally to comemerate the tenth anniversary of the shooting at Kent and Jackson State. The program will begin with the dedication of a stone memorial and will be followed by four speakers and music.

The murder of students at Kent and Jackson State by police and National Guardsmen showed the extent to which the State is willing to go in order to supress dissention. At a time when militarism is on the rise while social spending declines, and the threat of another war comes closer to reality it is important that we demonstrate our support for those who struggled against these very same evils a short ten years ago, but also we must send the message that the struggle is not over.

We will continue to struggle, as those before us have, we will remember their sacrifices and learn from their mistakes. We invite all students to come to the rally and show their support for the comemeration and the ongoing struggle.

LONG LIVE THE SPIRIT OF KENT AND JACKSON STATE!

Eviction from home. A struggle to survive.

The final of the Spring season of the Third World Theater Series is "The Eight Million" a new play by Steve Friedman, presented by Modern Times Theater.

The Eight Million is a multi-racial play about the life and death struggle between tenants and landlords in New York City. It is based on the real experiences of the citizens of Chelsea, but it might be about Amherst or Northampton. The "scences...furiously animated with a mixture of passion and pragmatism" have received both critical acclaim and heart felt recognition by people who themselves have been victimized by profit-hungry landlords.

Support clear, committed, quality political theater. Legal alternatives for tenants

Summer lease options available

By CAROL MORTON

Editor's note: Carol Morton is a paralegal at the Legal Services Office.

'Finding good housing is a major issue for students moving off campus next semester'

Less than one month of school is left, and many student tenants are wondering what will happen if they break their leases. Some are wondering whether they can break their lease, how to sublet, or what the risks involved are in leaving town. Several options are available.

What is a lease

A lease is an agreement between a landlord and a tenant allowing the tenant to live in an apartment or house for a specified number of months at a set rent. There is nothing "illegal" or "unlawful" about breaking a lease. However, if you leave your apartment before the expiration date and stop paying rent, you have broken your lease with the landlord, and he may sue for the unpaid rent. You have signed a contract and may be held responsible for the unpaid rent, whether or not you are living in the apartment until the end of the lease.

Getting out of your lease

If your leandlord does agree to let you out of the lease (highly unlikely at this time of year) be sure to get it in writing. If your landlord has refused to release you from paying rent, you have several options. Two of the most common ones are subletting to another person or taking your chances on being sued and leaving anyway.

Subletting

Unless your lease forbids it, you may sublet your apartment for the remainder of your contract, if you are lucky enough to find someone (a sublessee) who wants to move in. If you do find a sublessee, be sure to have them sign a written agreement. At this point, you should ask your landlord to release you from your contract. The sublessee then becomes responsible to the landlord and you have fulfilled your contract. Even if the sublessee fails to pay the rent, you are off the hook.

If you make an agreement with the landlord about subletting the place, GET IT IN WRITING!!! If you do not have something in writing signed by the landlord or an agent or employee of his, you may get a shock later, when the landlord claims he does not remember the deal the way you describe it.

Can't Sublet

Many students who cannot find anyone to sublet their apartment decide to just leave town anyway. If you do this, you risk being held responsible for the rent until someone else moves in—that is, you may be sued by your landlord. The landlord can only sue after the rent is due—so he cannot sue in June for unpaid August rent. Some landlords figure that it is not worth the expense, time and trouble to sue because they find it hard to collect from students. The end result is usually that the landlord will raise the rent next year to compensate for summer losses.

If your landlord sues

In the event that your landlord does sue you, you should be aware of the following things:

1. Sometimes a landlord will try to bring you to court for non-payment of rent before you have moved out. He must first give you a "14-day notice" which states that you must move out of your apartment within 14 days. If you do not leave, and if you do not pay the rent due within that time, ONLY THEN can the landlord begin court proceedings.

2. If your landlord sues for unpaid rent after you leave, he may at the same time sue for damage you may have done to your apartment in excess of the amount of your security deposit. So be sure to leave the apartment in broom clean condition with only reasonable wear and tear left unfixed. If you think that the landlord might try to hold you responsible for more damages to your apartment than actually exist by exaggerating the extent of claimed damages, you should try to take pictures before you move out.

3. If you have sublet your apartment to someone else without being released from your lease, you may sue the sublessee for any money which he owes.

4. The landlord will have to show that he has made an effort to try to re-rent the apartment. (Usually just listing with a realtor or placing anadvertisement in the newspaper is sufficient.)

Security deposit

One final point to keep in mind is that the landlord has the right to apply your security deposit toward any unpaid rent. So, even if you have left your apartment in good condition, there is a chance that you may not get your security deposit back.

Carter, experts clash on forecast of U.S. economy

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Carter said yesterday the nation has "turned the corner" on inflation, but two former top economists in Republican and Democratic administrations said the economy is falling into a far deeper and longer recession than Carter predicts.

"It's going to be one horrible recession," said Alan Greenspan, chairman of the Council of Economic Advisers in the Ford administration. "It's going to be terribly costly. It's going to throw a lot of people out of work."

Barry Bosworth, Carter's former director of the Council on Wage and Price Stability, said the economy is deteriorating "in a very steady and extreme fashion," and predicted the recession would last into 1981.

Carter, meanwhile, told a group of accountants at the White House that "we do believe we've turned the corner" in fighting inflation, and he repeated an earlier prediction that the inflation rate "will drop significantly during the summer."

Bright prospects of an easing in inflation, however, are being offset by darker-than-anticipated storm clouds of recession.

Greenspan and Bosworth, speaking at a public forum on inflation, concurred with Carter's prediction that inflation would fall from a current annual rate of 18 percent to about 10 percent or even less during the second half of 1980.

But the two economists departed sharply from Carter's prediction two weeks ago that a recession now probably underway will be "short and mild."

Greenspan and Bosworth said recent economic indicators point to a recession that may be as bad or worse than the country's last downturn, in 1974-75. That recession was the deepest since the Great Depression of the 1930s.

"On or around the second week of March, I got the impression that somebody pulled the plug on the American economy, and it is dropping at a much faster pace than I think any forecaster had assumed," said Greenspan. He added that rising worker layoffs and declining economic output point to a downturn "fairly close to what we experienced in the 1974-75 period."

Bosworth said he is not sure if the recession will be as severe as the last one, "but it will last a heck of a lot longer," at least into 1981, he said.

Bosworth also said Carter's credit-tightening policies designed to fight inflation only work if they bring on a recession that throws "a few million people out of work."

The idea of these policies, Bosworth said, is to create enough unemployment so that people "start to worry so much about keeping their jobs they don't want to ask for a wage increase."

The Carter administration has forecast that the recession, which is believed to have begun in March, would end before the end of this year. In his last economic report to Congress, Carter predicted unemployment would rise to 7.2 percent this fall and remain at about that level through 1981.

Local singer Jim Kimball

UMass graduate

a 'seasoned performer'

By ANNE REARICK
Special to the Collegian

JIM KIMBALL

A recent UMass graduate, Jim Kimball was formerly the lead guitarist and singer-songwriter with the Pioneer Valley group, the Bricker Band. During the 16 months the band was together, it played most of the major clubs, colleges and concert halls across New England. Kimball earned a reputation for being a dynamic and energetic performer. After the band broke up, he returned to UMass. He maintained a relatively low profile by occasionally performing as a solo artist in Western Mass. and on Cape Cod, devoting most of his "musical hours" to studio work and songwriting.

At a recent solo performance in a local Amherst club, Kimball displayed the self-confidence, enthusiasm, and electric energy of the seasoned performer he is. From the outset of the evening, he maintained a strong and simultaneously personal rapport with the crowd. A sensitive performer, Kimball adeptly controlled the moods and responses of his audience by shifting the tone of his performance from that of an intimate living room chat by the fire, to that of an all-out, foot-stomping, hoot 'n hollering New Year's Eve bash.

Kimball's repertoire mainly comprises original material, largely pop, in which he displays a unique talent for mating a clever lyric with a catchy melody.

Now, one should not be misled by the term "pop," for Kimball's style is the product of a variety of influences. Over the course of an evening an attentive listener can detect traces of country, rock, jazz and rhythm and blues. The song "Priscilla" is a bluesy rock 'n roll parody of a typically decadent evening during one's early college years. "The Reason I Feel So Right" is an infectious rhythm and blues-flavored tune which pushed the show into high gear. But it was not until after "In My Dreams," a beautifully-haunting and somewhat revealing ballad of farewells, that he really showed his vocal prowess. Gliding through the classic "Somewhere Over the Rainbow", he brought the room to a standstill.

Aside from being a top-notch vocalist, Kimball is a real crackerjack guitarist. Another of the evening's highlights came during the second set, when he broke into "Out of the Woods", a blistering funk instrumental in which Kimball displayed his "all fingers" wizardry. A chance to see this talented musician really should not be missed.

At present, Kimball is content dividing his energies between the business and creative aspects of the music industry, although he is anticipating hooking up with the right management in the near future so he may devote more time to his songwriting. Kimball is managing himself and has just completed a demo tape with which he intends to land a record contract. He is working an average of five nights a week and can be seen locally at Plumbley's, the Ambrosia Cafe, and the College Inn.

WMUA will feature a special one-hour program with Jim Kimball, Saturday at noon.

Blue cited J.B. Huatto and Van Duren as gambles that have paid off and said in the future he would attempt to bring in as many diverse styles of music as possible. He said he would like to see music such as funk, rythym and blues and bluegrass in the Bluewall.

"We think we're heading in the right direction," Harris said, adding renovations to the bar would begin soon, following the completion of renovations to the Top of the Campus Restaurant. These renovations will give the Bluewall a "touch of class," Harris said.

"We want to get rid of that cafeteria atmosphere and give it more of a night club feel," a spokesperson for the Campus Center Board of Governors said.

To improve the atmosphere of the bar, the wall set up during concerts to separate the drinking and non-drinking areas will be taken down and wristbands issued to patrons eligible to drink.

"This will let people move freely so that everyone can see the stage," Harris said, "We've had nothing but complaints about the present set-up."

SNAFU as usual

BILL HALLISEY

The aborted rescue mission into Iran has come under much criticism from people who don't know what they're talking about.

The infamous Mrs. Timm accused the president of stupidity for attempting "something that we've been told for five months could be so disastrous and could not in any way bring good results."

Now who's being stupid? One basic rule of thumb is, if you want to free hostages from terrorists you can't go around making like that's what you've got in mind. I can see the headlines: HOSTAGE RESCUE SLATED FOR APRIL 26—CARTER SAYS MUM'S THE WORD.

Some people said the raid was poorly timed, what with the new economic sanctions and everything. Poorly timed? Sure, no one was expecting a rescue attempt, least of all the Iranians, but that's just the point. Rule number two: If you want to take somebody by surprise you do it when they least expect it.

Some people said the mission was too risky and destined to fail. Bull. Military training and intelligence operations began the day the embassy was taken, if not earlier. Granted, the plan wasn't fool-proof, but it was quite feasible, and considering how screwed-up Iran is internally, it wasn't even supposed to be all that difficult.

Not all the money we spend on the military goes into building tanks and bombs, you know. A good portion goes into satellites, infrared cameras, computers, decoders, see-in-the-dark specs, guns that go "thwt" instead of "BBOOM!", chemical agents that'll have you puking ferociously in seconds, and devices for jamming radio signals and intercepting messages, not to mention all those clever little doohikkies they have (but never talk about) that would make James Bond's arsenal look like a toy chest.

Of course some of the money is used for paying-off informers, infiltrators, yes-men, and middle-men. Iran's just buzzing with spies. Some claim to be businessmen, others journalists. They speak in many tongues and carry passports from far-off lands, but they're all there for the same reason.

Which brings us to rule number three: Any country with the nerve to consider embarrassing Fidel Castro on television by planting a chemical in his shoes to make his beard fall off will certainly have no reservations about doing brilliantly devious things in any country it so desires—especially one as mixed-up as Iran.

The mission was well planned, well timed, and until it was aborted, well executed. One more helicopter and everything would have been just fine. But such was not the case. The commandos were ordered to scrub the mission and there was a crash. What luck. Which brings us to rule number four: If something can go wrong, it will. Something could. Something did.

'HELLO? YES, CHIEF, THIS IS THE PENTAGON. YOU WANT ANOTHER RESCUE MISSION? READY WHEN YOU ARE, CHIEF— JUST SAY THE MAGIC WOID!'

A decade later, the spirit lingers

CHARLIE BAGLI

Standing atop "Blanket Hill" a shiver went down my spine. It wasn't the wind that made me shudder though, it was the memory of four students being shot down at Kent State University, May 4, 1970.

A few years ago I visited Kent State and while standing atop that hill, from the very spot the national Guardsmen fired, I surveyed the area where murder was committed. It was a grassy hill that rolled down into a large playing field. On this day there was no one around, but in my mind I could see the Guardsmen marching and I could see the students.

Alan Candora, one of the nine students wounded May 4, 1970, showed me a nearby metal sculpture. There was a neat little hole in one side. It was where an M-1 bullet had entered and exited that day. I put my finger through it and thought of the M-1 bullets that tore through the flesh of thirteen students that day; four are dead and nine wounded.

This Sunday is the tenth anniversary. If you were to go to KSU today, there would be no Blanket Hill to stand atop. Now, there is a gym. The entire landscape has been altered. The only "memorial" to May 4, 1970 is a small tombstone in the parking lot. It's as if it never happened.

In 1970 it seemed like the anti-war movement had made tremendous headway. Opposition to the Vietnam War had swelled off the campuses and into the communities. Millions of people had been involved in activities of one kind or another. Many activists wondered how much longer such an unpopular war could last.

Then, in May, 1970, Nixon announced he was bringing the war into Cambodia. Shock was the immediate reaction on many campuses. That quickly turned into outrage. Even with all the protests, the war was now expanding, not shrinking.

Kent State students were no different. Renewed protests began. Students called for an end to the war and for ROTC (which supplied 60 to 70 percent of the officers for the war effort) to be thrown off campus. Nighttime marches through downtown Kent underlined the demands.

By May 3, the Governor declared martial law on the KSU campus. National Guardsmen were brought in fresh (or rather tired) from a Teamsters strike. That evening Guardsmen broke up a rally in the course of which some people were wounded by soldiers' bayonets.

Students persisted in expressing their opposition to the war and Nixon's incursion into Cambodia. On May 4th they gathered near Blanket Hill. National Guardsmen marched toward the protesting students with gas masks on and bayonets drawn. No one imagined them to have live ammunition in their rifles.

They chased the students over Blanket Hill and onto the playing fields. The Guardsmen then appeared to retreat. They started back up the hill. And then suddenly, one squad, on command, calmly turned around, knelt down and fired into a parking lot 250 feet away. When the rifle fire died down four students lay dead and nine wounded. Then the screaming began.

A shocked nation watched "democracy" bite the bullet. More than 500 colleges immediately went out on strike. As if to prove it was no accident, a short time later two black students were killed at Jackson State College in a volley of gunfire. We don't hear much about Jackson State, but that's the way it is with most black history in this country. The government showed how far it is willing to go to stop the anti-war movement.

Although 10 years later there is no Blanket Hill or fitting memorial, and the entire area has been buried under concrete, I will remember May 4, 1970.

There is a terrible sadness in the deaths of the young people at Kent and Jackson State. I'm sure their families and friends feel the emptiness of unjust death even if the University to this day has not seen fit to send a note to the families.

Yet, there is also something to remember with pride. It is the "spirit of Kent and Jackson State," for they are a part of all the young people that stand up again injustice. They did not keep quiet, turn the other cheek, or bury their heads in the books. They went out and did something. They could not allow an unjust war to continue in their name.

This may be what they've tried to bury at Kent State. Certainly, many hours have been spent telling us the sixties were a noisy waste of time. "But is a sense, May 4, 1970, is a day that belongs to those who remain involved, for whom life over the last 10 years has involved something more than money, power, hot tubs and gourmet cooking."

As we head into the 80's there is a renewed threat of war. Just as the students of Kent State and Jackson State, and the students of Soweto, South Africa took up the challenge to fight for freedom and against injustice, so must a new generation of young people carry on the tradition and "spirit of Kent and Jackson State."

Letters

Recognition deserved

To the Editor—

I am writing this letter on behalf of a friend of mine who is too kindhearted to express these feelings herself.

The subject is the equestrian team and the lack of support it gets from the Sports Department of this newspaper, and the entire school in general.

My friend competed in the Regional Horse Show last weekend, and there was not one word printed about it in any issue of the Collegian this past week. I think it is a disgrace to the team as a whole to go unrecognized at an event such as the Regionals. My friend happened to have won first place, making her eligible for the Nationals, however, obviously no one thought this was important enough to write about.

The equestrian team members work very hard, perhaps just as hard as the basketball, lacrosse, soccer, or any other team. The number of hours they put in is phenomenal, as well as the fact that they get up at 5:00 in the morning to groom horses that no one is going to see anyway. Still, they go unsupported by the school and the student body.

To me, this is an injustice. The very least the team deserves is a little recognition from a college newspaper, if nothing else.

Key notes, not quotes

To the Editor—

I couldn't help but notice the disdain with which Kevin Lozaw wrote about the bands chosen for Spring Concert [Collegian, 4/28/80]. He put quotation marks around key words used to refer to these bands: "musicians," "main act," and "bands." Through this device he implied that the Allman Brothers Band, Bonnie Raitt, and NRBQ are not worthy of these references.

My objection is not with Lozaw's preference in music; a new wave band is a good idea for Spring Concert. Rather, I object to his implication that these people, who have worked for years at the business of making music, are not musicians.

If this were the case, then any musician not conforming to the latest musical fad wouldn't merit the title "musician."

Perhaps if we all conformed a little less and dropped the arrogant posturing for a while, especially with regard to popular music, we would all enjoy music and each other a little bit more.

Kevin Lozaw's opinions could have been expressed just as well without those condescending little quotation marks.

American Express won't penalize you for graduating during a credit crisis.

American Express hasn't changed its application qualifications for graduating students during the current credit crisis.

That's because the American Express® Card isn't a credit card. It's a charge card. There's no revolving, open-end credit. You are expected to pay your bill in full every month. So with the Card, you don't get in over your head.

You use your head.

American Express is continuing its special application plan for graduating students. If you have a $10,000 job (or the promise of one) lined up, you can apply for an American Express Card right now.

You'll need the Card for everything from business lunches to vacations, from buying clothes to buying theatre tickets.

You'll have new responsibilities after graduation. The American Express Card will help you manage them.

To apply for a Card, just pick up an application at one of the displays on campus. Or you can call the toll-free number 800-528-8000, and ask for a special student application.

Tehran claims Americans responsible for sabotage

(AP) — Mysterious saboteurs who Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini claims are directed by Washington struck again in Iran yesterday, attacking the occupied U.S. Embassy in Tehran, bombing shops in two Iranian cities and trying to blow up a Tehran bridge, the Iranian news media reported.

The young militants holding the embassy said a revolutionary guard was wounded in the overnight attack by "U.S. agents," Tehran Radio reported. Several persons were reported wounded in the bomb attacks.

In an unexpected development, American comedian and civil rights activist Dick Gregory met with Khomeini in Tehran. Afterward Gregory sounded hopeful for a resolution of the hostage crisis, saying, "I don't think we have passed the talking stage yet."

Terrorists let deadlines pass at Iran's London embassy

LONDON (AP) — Three Arab terrorists holding at least 19 hostages at the Iranian Embassy let two death deadlines pass for their captives yesterday as the Tehran government flatly refused to negotiate their "blackmail" demand to release Arab prisoners in Iran.

"We are prepared to accept the martyrdom of our brothers in England," Iranian President Abolhassan Bani-Sadr said. The gunmen were threatening to kill only their Iranian hostages, believed to number 16.

Iranian Foreign Minister Sadegh Ghotbzadeh vowed eye-for-an-eye reprisals,

C.C. holds Safety Day program

By JAMES F. MAHONEY
Collegian Staff

A large crowd gathered as the flames and smoke billowed up from the burning liquid in the barrel.

A bad fire? No, it was a fire extinguisher demonstration outside of Hasbrouck Laboratory as part of the first Campus Center "Safety Day" which was held yesterday.

The demonstration was one of several separate events included in the day long program. Other workshops included First Aid/emergency care, a stress clinic for employees, and a food service safety and sanitation session.

The exhibition attracted approximately 100 people, who watched as several different volunteers from the crowd put out a variety of purposely set fires. The events were sponsored by the Campus Center and the Environmental Health and Safety Office.

The workshops were originally designed as an employee training program said spokesman and Campus Center safety officer Gil Mottla. They were geared towards occupational safety, but it was decided to open them up to the campus-at-large, he said.

Mottla said "this may be the first of an annual series of safety days.

The program also had an all-day exhibition set up in a Campus Center room. The room had various exhibits including: laboratory safety, motor vehicle safety and a CPR (cardio pulmonary resuscition) exhibit.

Mottla said proper training saved a student's finger after an accident last year.

Boston Mayor Kevin White looks up to the top of a three and one half ton birthday cake consumed yesterday as Boston officials launched a summer-long celebration of the city's 350th birthday. Baker Arthur Strasnick of Lynn used 2,000 pounds of flour, 1,000 pounds of sugar, 500 pounds of shortening, 3,000 eggs, 2,000 quarts of milk to make the huge cake. AP Laserphoto.

Local play probes Class of '71 changes

By DAVID AMBOS
Collegian Staff

"Uncommon Women and Others", playing

Review

through Sunday at Mt. Holyoke College's Lab Theater.

Wendy Wasserstein based "Uncommon Women and Others" on her experiences at Mt. Holyoke College; the characters were modeled after her classmates.

Her play was first performed for the public in 1977 by the Phoenix Theater in New York, where it enjoyed a successful run, both popularly and critically. Later, it was broadcast over PBS, with blooming actress Meryl Streep in a supporting role. Enthusiastic response demanded two encore showing,

Now, nine years after Wasserstein's graduation from Mt. Holyoke, "Uncommon Women" has been brought home to the place that inspired it. In this production, which features virtuoso acting and sensitive direction, designed in cooperation with the aut;hor, the play seems very much at home indeed.

At the play's open, we find five women, all friends and former classmates, reunited at a luncheon in a New York restaurant. It is six years after they and their unruly, unconventional, truly uncommon contemporaries made their not unwelcome exit from the tradition-bound, ivy-smothered educational edifice which they had challenged, shaken and transformed.

The Class of '71 had seen revolutionary changes, changes they had helped effect, and changes which granted them new freedoms. They had gained sexual and intellectual licenses -- or at least learner's permits and much broader career and life options. The one freedom which they occasionally found burdensome was freedom of choice. And the one freedom which they desperately desired was the freedom, once in a while, to be ordinary, and not always be expected to be brilliant, extraordinary and "uncommon".

The Class of '71 had seen revolutionary changes, changes they had helped to effect, and changes which granted them new freedoms.

In a deeply moving, genuine, always funny way, the play reenacts the comi-tragedy of maturation the women played in college, and explores the problems of identity and decision-making they still share after many years.

Like the atmospheric furniture and props (donated by the college) the performances are highly authentic. The only discordant notes are struck by the emotional flatness which untunes the actresses at moments. Jennie Hausler as Kate, the cool, super-competent pre-law student, has every artistic right to portray her character as detached, but she overdoes it at times.

The crying jags required of some of the actresses do not work as successfully as they might because they lack pain pillars in their foundations. Even Jeri Lynn Cohen as Holly, who performs brilliantly in an emotionally-wrenching phone monologue when she finally summons enough courage to call a man she met briefly in a museum, has problems; her tears at the end do not flow, but must be pumped.

But this is critical nit-picking, especially in Cohen's case, whose performance, overall, has a luminosity just a couple notches short of a supernova. Only slightly less brilliant is Cheryl Ann Campbell as tough, razor-tongued Rita, a character who is a cross between Brunhilde and Dorothy Parker.

Exceptional in two minor roles are Karen Krueger as Mrs. Rutledge, the girls' "housemother", and Kathy Hiler as Carter, a spaced-out freshperson. It takes a while for most first-year students to adjust to life at college; Carter, bless her, is still adjusting to life on earth.

Wasserstein's play, in this production, is winning, witty, wildly-funny, winsome, warm and wonderful. I could run down to Roget's for some more alliteratives, but I think you get the idea. It's the type of thing that sorely tempts one to write, "If you only see one play this year, this must be the one."

U.S. makes preparations for homeless Cubans

KEY WEST, Fla. (AP) — Federal officials made preparations yesterday to send homeless Cuban refugees to a "tent city" at Eglin Air Force Base and detained 25 immigrants suspected of being criminals in their homeland.

Boats manned by CubanAmericans continued to stream into South Florida ports after pickups at the Port of Mariel in Cuba. Officials estimated that 7,000 refugees had arrived in Florida since the "Freedom Float" began last week — double the number the United States said it would take when the Cuban government announced it would give exit rights to 10,000 people who crowded the Peruvian embassy.

U.S. officials said there was no end in sight to the refugee exodus.

I believe that there are now as many as 3,000 boats at Mariel or en route to Mariel ... there seems to be no let up," said Coast Guard Commander Samuel Dennis.

Calm Caribbean seas — a sharp contrast to last weekend's "baby hurricane" that claimed at least four lives — have improved safety, Dennis said. Coast Guard cutters patrolling the 90 miles between Florida and Cuba were being helped by U.S. Navy ships, which were diverted from scheduled war games.

While many of the refugees have relatives in South Florida with whom they can stay, others arrived without any American contacts.

Federal officials will begin no later than today to ship those immigrants to Eglin Air Force Base in north Florida, according to Eugene Eidenderge, a special assistant to the president.

Maj. John Fergus at Eglin said a survey team Wednesday determined the facility could handle approximately 15,000 refugees.
